ENCORE AUCTION OF THE ESTATE OF LAURA BRANIGAN

SATURDAY, MARCH 5, 2005, 11 A.M.

O.P.M. AUCTIONS, LTD

5 Library Avenue • Westhampton Beach, N.Y. • 631.288.1850

Preview: Day of Sale 9 - 11 A.M. • Also On-line at www.opmauctions.com

Laura Branigan's octave rich voice, powerful stage presence, and international appeal made her one of the premier female vocalists of the 80's. Listening to her evoked immediate and lasting emotions with the presence of heated urban sensuality in a song such as "Moonlight On Water". Her love of urban music was again reflected in "Bad Attitude" and at a time when musical sexuality was still in its infancy Laura tore down the barriers in the classic "Self Control". The sensitivity of her first major producer, Jack White, to universally accepted good music led Laura to her great appeal not only in the American market but also internationally. His careful choice of songs such as "Ti Amo", "Solitaire", "Self Control", and the quintessential song that rocketed Laura to stardom, "Gloria", were not only great music but coincidentally all European.

Laura's dynamic, rangy, and emotional vocal presence combined with her electrifying stage presence and the choice of music resulted in a broad appeal and demand for Laura on both the American and International stage.

Laura matured in her craft and in the 90's continued her musical ascendancy with a major first album in that decade "Laura Branigan". This album actually showcased the broad vocal and emotional power present in this uniquely gifted performer and contained songs such as "Never In A Million Years", "Smoke Screen", "Let Me In", "Turn The Beat Around", "Reverse Psychology", and a number of other powerful songs. She continued to thrill her audiences throughout the 90's with live performances and additional albums. In the new millennium she starred in the production of "Love, Janis" as Janis Joplin and had begun production of a new album. Her still advancing career was abruptly halted with her untimely death in August 2004.

Laura was a wonderfully gifted artist, poet, singer, song writer, actress, and possessed the "It" factor that forever joined her with her audiences throughout the world. Her ability to connect to her fans will keep her alive in the world's musical heart.

This auction, containing the remaining items from her estate, represents the last opportunity to own very unique, special, and important pieces connected to this great stars life achievements that come directly from her family.

O.P.M. Auctions, Ltd. again feels privileged to offer these final items of the Estate of Laura Branigan for sale. We especially appreciate the trust Ms. Branigan's family has given to us in permitting us to conduct this important auction.

Disaster May End the Plan for Floating Industrial Facility in LI Sound

By Dan Rattiner

Dawn broke over the eastern end of Long Island on Sunday with clear skies, a bright sun and seasonable weather. And it looked like it would just be another wonderful, peaceful day in these parts. How wrong we were.

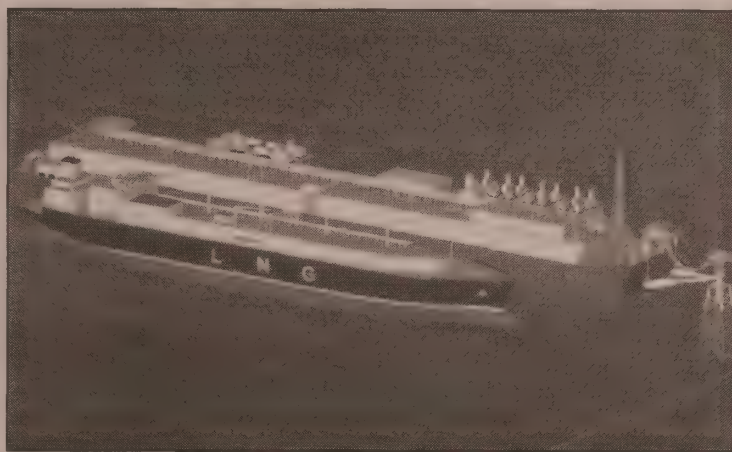

By ten in the morning, the first Cross-Sound ferry landed at Orient Point, from New London, with the people on board declaring breathlessly that, during the crossing, they had seen an enormous floating industrial plant, larger than any ship apparently, anchored in the middle of Long Island Sound, approximately ten miles to their west. Some said they were convinced that it was the Floating Storage and Regasification Unit (FSRU) that is just now in the planning stages, having been proposed by a Houston-based oil firm and wildly opposed by practically everybody on the East End. How could that be? Had it been a mirage?

By noon, the truth was out. Public relations people for Broadwater, the owners of the floating plant, had called all the media on eastern earliest for eight years, there was nothing to prevent them from dropping anchor with one to show the local populace there was nothing to worry about. Anyone could anchor a boat in the middle of the Sound at any time. And they had built one just to prove that it could work — no floating regasification plant had ever been built before so there had been the possibility that it wouldn't work — and they had motored it into the Sound during the night and had dropped anchor just where they were proposing to put it — nine miles into Long Island Sound just to the northwest of Riverhead. Launches would be shuttling members of the Press and other officials out to it from a dock at Wading River.

Long Island to a press conference aboard the facility for three p.m. that afternoon. J. Worthington Greeley, the President of

Needless to say, the announcement of this press conference traveled through the otherwise uneventful Sunday morning of the rural community here like an electric shock. By two p.m., helicopters from all four TV networks were circling above the Unit. Fishing boats from Montauk, Greenport and Shinnecock had established a large ring

Tanker docks at floating Broadwater Gasification Plant

Broadwater, would be there. And he would answer questions.

As to the presence of the FSRU, the public relations people said that though the two billion dollar facility was still waiting for its approvals, and could not be online even at the

around the vessel with people on board carrying signs — kept at a distance by armed Broadwater security people in launches — and many other people with boats were on their way. Governor Pataki, reportedly, was flying down. But it seemed unlikely that he would get out to the 3 p.m. press conference in time.

J. Worthington Greeley arrived at the facility in a black helicopter at exactly 2:45 p.m., and with great fanfare, strode down the quarter mile length of the ship under the main regasification pipes to the bow where folding chairs had been set up for members of the press and visiting dignitaries. At the last minute, it had been decided that it was warm enough to hold the press conference outdoors, in the fifty-degree weather, on deck in the sunshine.

Greeley spoke over a microphone, in order to be heard above the din of the hissing of the pipes, the grinding of various motors and lifting machines below decks and the cries of the sea gulls that had come over to look and were now circling around overhead.

"You are and we are — all of us — on board a vessel that represents the wave of the future," Greeley said. "The New York Metropolitan area consumes about three and a half billion feet of gas every day. And that thirst is growing. It will soon surpass the ability of all the existing pipelines to bring it to New York from other parts of the country. And so natural gas will have to be imported. From afar. How it is done is that the gas is cooled down to -260 degrees when it turns to liquid. And bottled as liquid, it takes up less than 1/600th of the space it would take up if bottled as gas. Then it is shipped here aboard freighters.

"Arriving here at Broadwater, it is goes through a re-gasification process at this facility. And then as gas, it is fed into the underwater gas pipeline that goes across the Sound from Connecticut to New York, and into your homes.

"How much gas can this facility process? One billion cubic feet a day. About one third the entire supply. It is true that Broadwater will then become the single largest supplier of natural gas for the New York area, but our true concerns are for you, our customers. You have nothing to fear.

"You also have nothing to fear about the physical safety of the plant. We have all the latest fire extinguishers on board. And plenty of other safeguards. There will also be patrol boats with trained men aboard to keep pleasure craft from getting within a mile and a quarter of this plant — they are doing their job as we speak — so there will be no terrorist attacks. And if there WERE an explosion, your own officials have said that the ball of fire would not extend out more than two and a half miles. It will never reach land. This is not like a nuclear plant or anything.

"Now you will notice that off to the east over there — if you will look over there — you will see a huge freighter coming toward us. We wanted you to see how this plant works. This freighter — which is from North Korea — carries nearly two billion square feet of natural gas on board, and it will dock here momentarily."

People shifted in their chairs.

"We will go through a full unloading process with this freighter, but since we can't send off this very needed gas to you citizens today because we do not have the permits, we will process it into useable gas and then process it back into liquid gas which will then be returned to the ship. It will take about half an hour. While the freighter is docking, do you have any questions?"

A man with a sombrero got up.

"I just want to warn you," he said. "I am Dr. Jose Garcia Alvarez from Ecuador. There is a very dangerous eel from our country that was seen last week swimming toward these waters.

The Crown

It's the Crowning Achievement in Sag Harbor. Let's Rebuild its Steeple.

By Dan Rattiner

As you walk around the downtowns of many of the villages in the Hamptons, you will see churches clearly rising up to where there should be a steeple — but there's no steeple. They will get to that someday.

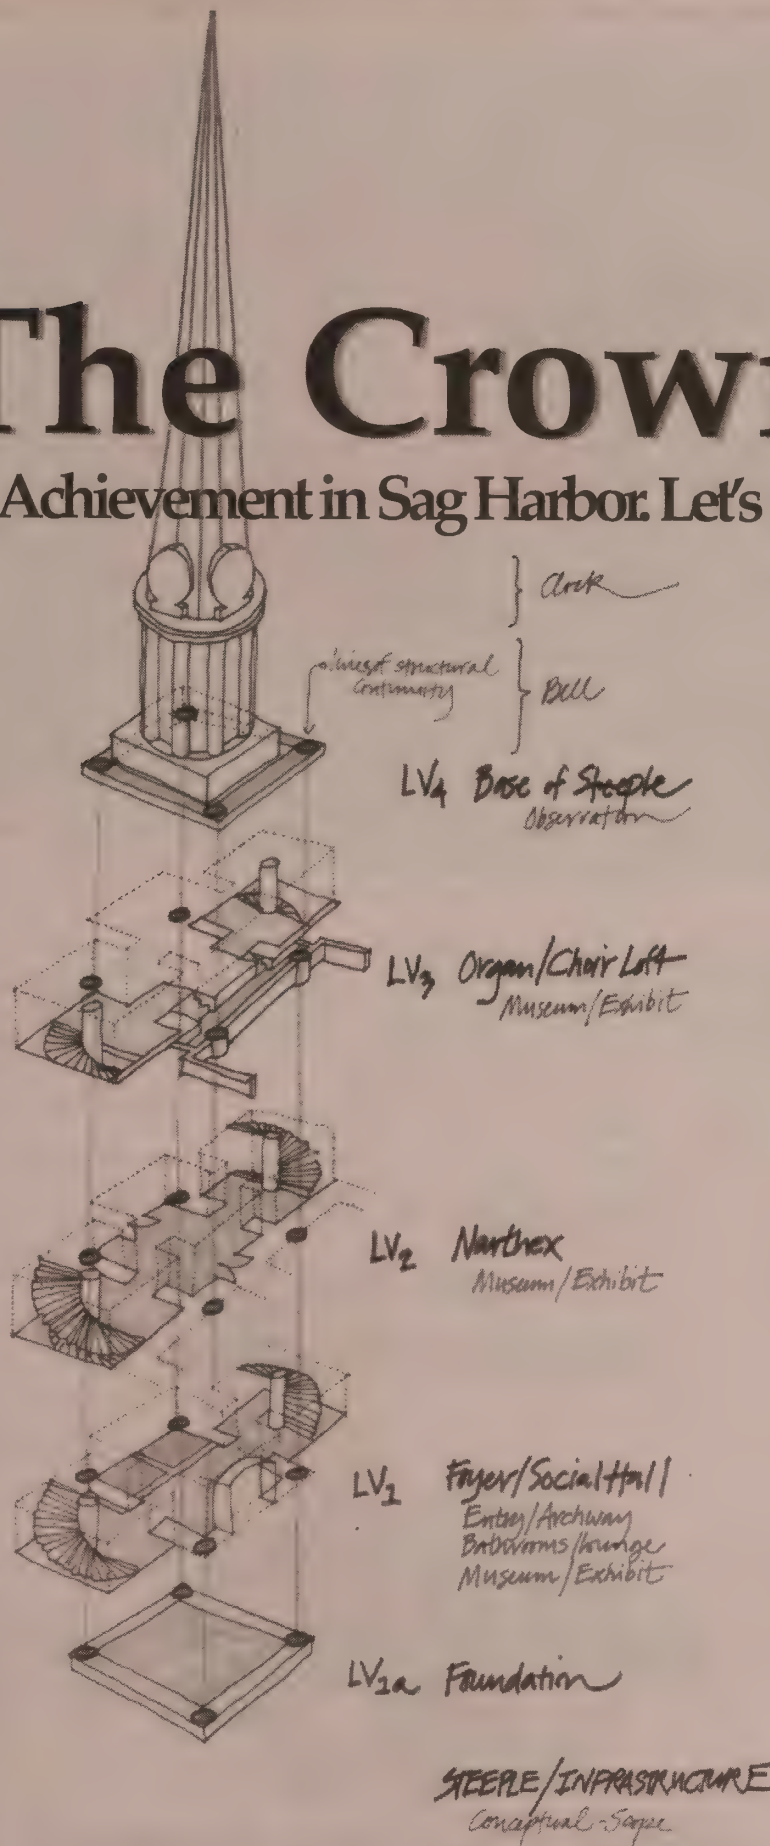

This is an honored tradition among members of many churches, that the church is built little by little, almost as if every generation should put their mark on their house of worship, a stained glass panel here, a painting on the ceiling there. The steeple comes last, or next to last. An adornment of a clock is last on some towers, a beautiful carillon of bells on others.

This tradition may apply to many churches on the East End (it also applies to other churches around the country) but it should not apply to what is surely the largest church ever built out here, which is the Old Whaler's Church in Sag Harbor. It appears to be waiting for some future generation to build a steeple on top of it. The fact is, it had one, but it fell down. And nobody has made it a priority to put it back up.

"I do not expect to see the steeple back on the church in my lifetime," said Harry Bates, a Sag Harbor architect who worked on the design for the interior church repair. Instead, the focus is on raising money for the construction of the replacement of window casements and sashes, now completed, and the painting of the interior, now underway.

Thus the church is considering the replacement of the steeple in the traditional manner. Something for a future generation. There's no hurry.

But what is being overlooked is the tradition throughout America of replacing, as quickly as possible, something important to a community if it gets damaged, whether it is religious or secular. One only has to look at how quickly we have planned and will shortly begin to build the Freedom Tower, a replacement for the downed twin towers, to see that tradition in action.

'Conceptual reconstruction of steeple with infrastructure'

The Old Whaler's Church was originally constructed in 1847, as the triumphant crown of Sag Harbor. The money for it was raised by the village's whaling company owners, the equivalent of billionaires today, who had gotten rich and built numerous large mansions for themselves — many of which are still standing.

Sag Harbor had become, by the 1840s, the second largest whaling port in America. The largest was New Bedford, Massachusetts. And the third largest was Nantucket. More than 100 oceangoing whaling ships were owned by wealthy men of Sag Harbor. Their ships would go out with a crew of twenty to thirty men, including harpooners, mates, captains and cooks, to sail to the four corners of the world, harpooning whales and loading up the empty casks they had brought with them with melted down whale blubber — whale oil, which at that time was the primary fuel used in America for interior lighting. Two years after the church was completed, Sag Harbor experienced a "million dollar year," a staggering sum for that time. It was a prosperous and lively port town, written about by many writers, including Herman Melville and James Fenimore Cooper.

The site chosen for the Whaler's Church, also called the First Presbyterian Church, was the brow of the tallest hill in the community. Architect Minard Lafever, who designed the Old Trinity Church in Brooklyn Heights, NY, was chosen for the project, and he came in with a daring design. The church would be built in the Egyptian Revival style, a style that was all the rage for that year, and the main part of the church would rise up eighty feet to a platform. From that point upward, there would be constructed, also in the Egyptian revival style, the tallest and most slender structure ever built on Long Island. It would rise up 168 feet, just the steeple itself. And with the church below and the rise of the hill, the project would tower over the Village of Sag Harbor. In fact, for nearly a hundred years, it was the tallest structure on Long Island, the equivalent of a 24-story building on the top of a hill the equivalent of another 10 stories. It was, particularly to those arriving home after years at sea, the landmark of Sag Harbor, the first thing that appeared on the horizon as they approached the coast.

Just a few years later, however, the whaling industry came to an end. Most of the whales around the world had been fished out. Finding more whale oil was now a three-year voyage and a prohibitively expensive one. And now there was kerosene and soon thereafter, oil. The whaling ships all left Long Wharf almost simultaneously, upon learning that gold had been discovered in California. Sag Harbor then went into a long decline.

In September, 1938, the most powerful hurricane ever to hit eastern Long Island swept through Sag Harbor, lifting off roofs, knocking the bell tower off the Methodist Church and flooding downtowns with water, from Westhampton Beach to Providence, Rhode Island. Somewhere in the middle of this fury — with the winds estimated at 160 miles an hour and more — this magnificent slender steeple lifted off the platform of the church, tumbled through the air, broke in two and crashed to Earth, the top part speared into the ground next door.

Sag Harbor embarked upon a tremendous cleanup with limited resources after that hurricane. The Methodist Church bell tower was put back. The 168-foot-tall steeple never was. And so, today, this church, up on a hill, rises just eight stories high, with a platform for a roof. And no steeple.

If the East End had limited resources in 1938, that is not the case today. When the entire St. Andrews Dune Church needed to be moved 50 feet to take it away from the back of the ocean dunes in Southampton, the money was found. There is little doubt in my mind that the money could be found for the restoration of the Whaler's Church steeple.

The plans call for doing it a little differently this time. The proportions of the steeple would be exactly the same, and the design of the steeple would be exactly the same on the outside, but inside, there would be several steel beams that would extend all the way from the point of the steeple, down to a steel ring at the choir level of the church, and there would be more steel down to concrete footings in the sub-basement of the structure. Inside the steeple, there would be room for a tall telecommunications tower, and a spiral staircase to a small interior platform just under the point. What a view there will be from up there. Let's build it.

Shoveling Snow in Amagansett, Hockey and the Spelling Bee Bandit

By Dan Rattiner

On the second day of the big blizzard three weeks ago, a group of Amagansett mothers carried out a rebellion. They went to the Amagansett School playground with snow shovels and made the playground fit for their kids to play in. Administrators tried to stop them, saying school policy was not to shovel the snow on the school property. They said they could not be responsible if any of them were injured, and that for insurance reasons, no adults without passes were allowed on the property between 8 and 4 when school was in session, and they should immediately stop shoveling.

The mothers didn't stop. They shoveled until the playground was clear. "They weren't doing it, the kids needed to get outside, and so we figured it was no big deal, we'd do it."

The school said its decision not to shovel was primarily due to budget considerations that prevented them from paying their maintenance people to go out and do it. They said school policy was to just not go outside until the snow melted, and meantime keep the children busy with running around in the gym, or for the older kids running laps, keeping track of the miles they covered and figuring how far they had collectively run — had they gone to Ohio? To Kansas? — watching videos (prescreened of course), working on the computer and going to the library. The administrators also said that they had the kids watch the snow melt naturally as a kind of exercise in how nature works.

The mothers weren't buying it. They shoveled. They finished. They left.

Here on the East End, the decision of whether to shovel or not to shovel and instead watch it melt is left up to the individual schools in the community. Some schools shovel, some don't. At the Sag Harbor Elementary School, the rule is to shovel it as soon as it comes down, in the belief that any day you can get to be outdoors is better than a day spent indoors.

They caught the "Spelling Bee Bandit" the other day. This man — they knew it was a man because of the surveillance cameras — would come into one or another of the banks here on Long Island, go to a teller's window and then pass across a note. THIS IS A ROBRI one of

A HAPPY ENDING

By Christian McLean

The two-week search for sixteen-year-old Stephanie Caruso ended last week in El Paso, Texas, when the young Hampton Bays girl, after returning north across the Mexican border, called home.

Around two in the afternoon on February 16th, Stephanie's mother, Christine Kunz, received her telephone call at work. While she was talking to her daughter, a co-worker contacted the Southampton Town Police, triggering a chain reaction of telephone calls; Lieutenant John James contacted U.S. Marshals, who contacted the El Paso Police department, who found Stephanie only a few blocks from the border. She was questioned and examined by a doctor before boarding a plane back to New York.

Within hours of Stephanie's New York arrival, Lester B. Joy, the twenty-four-year-old convicted sex offender from Morristown, N.J. who she ran away with, was arrested in Mexico. Mr. Joy was detained and then transferred to US officials. He will face charges for violating parole in New Jersey, as well as a series of charges in New York and possibly even federal charges — theoretically keeping him in jail for a very long time, which should add some security and closure to this horrible ordeal.

Stephanie left her Hampton Bays residence of her own free will on the evening of January 31st, but things quickly went awry. Unbeknownst to her, she was climbing into the car with a sex offender. She had met him on the Internet. Southampton Town Police, thinking they were being helpful, released information about a paper trail left by the teenage girl.

Mr. and Mrs. Kunz, Stephanie's mother and stepfather, complained about Southampton Town Police's treatment of the case, specifical-the notes said. GIV ME ALL YOURE MONY was another. And NO DIE, as in, no colored dye packs. In a community that prides itself on its high tech workforce and plethora of laboratories and technical companies, this was a great embarrassment. The robberies went on and on — the man hit at least 15 banks during the course of the past year — and what made it even worse, he was well dressed, middle aged and good looking. Surely he could have gotten a job almost anywhere.

It turned out that the "Spelling Bee Bandit" was Bart Thomas, a 43-year-old Ronkonkoma man with a wife and 15-year-old son. Mr. Thomas, when he was younger, had been a straight A student in school, according to his mother.

They caught him after he hit up two Chase Manhattan branches in one day, forty-five minutes apart, both on Northern Boulevard in Great Neck. At the second robri, a bank employee followed him out to the parking lot and got the license number of his truck. He was a project manager for AGE Excavations and the getaway car was the company truck he drove. He did the robri, he said, because he needed the muni. Hmmm.

Two friends, age 65 and 70, who were sitting in the lobby outside a Nassau County Courthouse the other day, one of them waiting to be called in because of a minor traffic matter, the other just there to be with his friend, were handcuffed and hauled off by security officers when they began telling lawyer jokes.

"This whole thing has been the silliest and stupidest thing in the world," Harvey Kash, 70, said about the matter to a Newsday reporter yesterday

When they started telling jokes, which got louder and louder and funnier and funnier, it began to anger an attorney who was also sitting in that lobby, who knew there was an old law on the books that said people behaving in a disrespectful manner in or near a Nassau County Courtroom could be arrested and indicted on felony charges.

The thing got so bizarre when officers came over to arrest them, that in addition to the disrespectful violation, they were also charged with resisting arrest and disorderly conduct.

So it went to the Grand Jury, which three days ago refused to indict them.

Barbara Bernstein, executive director of the Nassau chapter of the New York Civil Liberties Union, had this to say. "It's such an incredible waste of time and money and it is demeaning to the DA's office that he would go after such a frivolous complaint."

Some years ago, incidentally, Harvey Kash and his friend Carl Lanzisera, 65, founded a group called Americans for Legal Reform. The whole incident, therefore, got lots of press.

Last Wednesday, the Commissioner of Hockey announced the cancellation of the entire NHL hockey season because the players and the franchise owners could not agree on a financial arrangement for the games to continue.

The reason there was a problem was because fewer and fewer people are coming to hockey games and fewer and fewer people are watching the games on television. When games were first cancelled at the beginning of the season because of the dispute, the reaction of most people was — the games have been cancelled? The dropping of a contract by NBC because of a lack of viewers was sort of the last straw.

At this point, there is a very big fear that if there is no hockey this year, it may be that there is no hockey next year or even the year after that. Maybe this is the end of the National Hockey League.

To prevent that from happening, there has been talk of bringing in less skilled hockey players to play the game. But then, who would watch? A better idea, it seems to me, would be to create a new sort of TV show that would combine elements of the ho-hum game of NHL hockey with the sizzling excitement of a Survivor episode. Put skates on an accountant from Milwaukee. Strap a goalie mask on a country western singer from Memphis. Let them all go at each other and may the best team win. Win, perhaps a million dollars.

Now that Republicans and Democrats in town offices in Southampton are cooperating with one another closely, there are several politically active people in the town who feel that there ought to be ANOTHER party created, which would endorse prospective candidates with unusual agendas that cannot get themselves on either the Republican or Democratic ticket.

Out of this muddled thinking has been born the Integrity Party.

"If it looks like there's a candidate who will be heavily favored in a town election who is getting all the other party lines, we might consider backing the other candidate, just because we want to see more candidates run in closely contested elections," said Darren Johnson, one of the organizers of the Integrity Party.

Right.

My Kingdom For Some Sand

Trouble Oceanfront From Montauk to Hampton Bays and Quogue

By Dan Rattiner

Perry Duryea, Jr. the Montauk lobsterman and politician who passed away last year at the age of 83, told me not long before he died that he didn't have enough facts to confirm global warming but there was little doubt in his mind that sea levels were rising.

"I can see it right at my dock in Fort Pond Bay," he said. "I've run the lobster company for fifty years from that dock, and my father ran it before me. I can tell you that when I was a kid, average high tide at the end piling of that dock had a mark on it which my father made in 1935. I saw him do it. Today, average high tide is an inch and a half higher than that mark."

What did anybody expect, when the polar ice caps are seen melting, when the Swiss Alps have lost their snowcaps — which have run off down rivers into the Adriatic and out into the Atlantic — when pieces of Antarctica the size of Rhode Island detach and float out to sea — which the Larsen Ice Shelf did one year ago, melting into the Indian Ocean?

I may not be able to speak with the authority of Perry Duryea Jr., but I've been going out to the ocean beaches here in the Hamptons for more than twenty five years. I've seen sand wash in, to give a broad swimming beach in the summertime, and wash out in the winter to create dangerous spots where house foundations are exposed, but I have never seen anything like what we have had in the past few winters.

Last winter, the sea washed up in front of East Hampton Main Beach so far that had it gone another ten feet before it started filling in for summer, it would have taken the bathing pavilion with it. And a few years before that, it actually did wash out several oceanfront in front of Job's Lane, Bridgehampton.

What is in serious danger one winter is filled with sand another winter — there doesn't seem to be any rhyme or reason to it — but more and more the crises seem to come. And this winter it has been the worst. There have been cries for help in Hampton Bays where houses are in jeopardy near the border with Quogue. Beachfront houses are also in jeopardy in Mecox, in front of Fairfield Lane in Sagaponack, by Fowler's Beach in Sagaponack, at the end of Town Line Road separating Southampton Town from East Hampton Town, at the Georgica Beach Association and in parts of Beachampton. Numerous beaches this winter are impassable to beach buggies for the first time. And a stretch of downtown Montauk oceanfront is so bad in the commercial district that the Town of East Hampton is considering building a seawall of boulders almost a quarter mile long to protect the businesses inland there.

One creative idea is to move sand from beaches that have more than enough, or too much, where jetties have locked in the sand, to areas where the situation is particularly bad.

This is being done in at least two spots that I know of, but it is stretching Southampton and East Hampton town budgets. And there are far fewer beaches with too much sand than with too little sand. And how much should be done anyway? Those who built their homes by the ocean knew the risks when they bought or built homes there. (Interestingly, the Native American who lived here before the white men came thought it was idiotic to build by the beach and they did not do so.) Should taxpayers of moderate means inland pay for damage caused to houses at the ocean built by the wealthy? It's a fair question.

Last week, an official United States Federal Agency, after long study, declared that without any doubt, the raising of the temperature worldwide — which has caused the melting of the glaciers and the subsequent rising of the tides — is caused by hydrocarbon emissions into the air from the back of automobiles and the tops of power plants and factories. If we want to reverse this trend, we are going to have to find environmentally clean sources of power.

Many people who can afford oceanfront properties are wealthy and in business positions to impact the future of hydrocarbon emissions. If that does not happen, however, well, there's government, and if THAT doesn't happen, there's prayer. Maybe God will take pity on us for what we have done.

When we embraced the Industrial Revolution, we only wanted to have fun, after all.

Stony Brook Appears Ready to Shortly Take Over Southampton College

By Sarah Gross

The State University at Stony Brook is poised to take over the entire Southampton College campus, according to Stony Brook's president, Dr. Shirley Strum Kenny. Talks have been underway for some time, and although the soon to be defunct Southampton College maintains that other Universities are still interested, it looks likely that the Stony Brook deal will be cemented in the coming months. Dr. Kenny has instructed a committee to look into implementing a full academic curriculum, which could be offered as early as the fall of 2006. The curriculum would be ecologically based, looking primarily at the sustainability of resources, something she describes as a very twenty-first century approach to academia.

The main issue that plagues Stony Brook, however, is the financial planning that a take-over would entail. "That part is harder and far less thrilling," said Dr. Kenny in earnest from her office on Friday. "There are three kinds of expenses we have to look at to see if it's possible for us to do this. First, the purchase or rental of the facility. Second, we have to do the remediation that needs to be done: security, administration, recruitment. All the things you have to do to run a campus. And third, the issue of being able to run the operations of the campus. Given the fact that LIU has higher tuition than we do, this is not an easy thing." She will be looking for state funding, but also for local investment. She hopes that the East End community will be generous, and reasons that if she can close the deal, it would be a good thing for Long Island, a good thing for Southampton, and a good thing for the East End in general. Her main concern, though, is for her first-born: "There's no way we can diminish the Stony Brook campus by putting

TRIBAL RECOGNITION: 29 YEARS AND COUNTING

By Christian McLean

Since 1978, the Shinnecock Nation, one of the longest self-governing Indian tribes in America, has been petitioning for Federal recognition from the United States Government. The process has lasted twenty-seven years and has already cost the Nation almost a million dollars in expenses. A new bill, H.R. 512, sponsored by California Republican Representative Richard Pombo has been put forth in Congress in an attempt to expedite this long and arduous procedure endured by the Shinnecock and several other tribes as they await Federal recognition.

The recognition of tribal sovereignty by the U.S. Government has several implications, and although a sense of tribal pride and federal benefits may be high on the list, the one factor which seems to be on most people's minds is gaming. Once the Shinnecock receive Federal recognition, their ability to build a casino on reservation land will become a very real possibility.

H.R. 512 is designed to place Native American tribes who have petitioned for Federal recognition before October 17, 1988 and who have been classified as "Ready, Waiting for Active Consideration," before July 1, 2004 on a fast-track toward Federal recognition. If the bill passes, the Secretary of Interior has one year from the institution of the Act to determine whether or not an Indian tribe is suitable for recognition. If the Secretary does not decide within one year, the tribe has the right to petition the "appropriate United States district court" for a decision. The court then rules on the case. If the tribe is decided to be unfit for Federal recognition, they have one money into Southampton. [The new venture] must build up Stony Brook."

Dr. Kenny has a long and impressive history of doing just that. While at Stony Brook, she has developed Brookhaven Science Associates to manage Brookhaven National Laboratory; she has overseen a major campus building program; presided over significant growth in research funding and development and taken the college into Division 1 athletics. One of her major concerns has always been the improvement of undergraduate education. To this end, she established the Boyer Commission on Educating Undergraduates in the Research University that was charged with creating a new model of undergraduate education for major research universities. All the while, though, she has continued her teaching and research career.

Dr. Kenny isn't the only one championing the cause of this takeover. She has described the trustees of Long Island University as being receptive to and interested in the idea of Stony Brook having an imprint further east on the island. And State Senator Kenneth LaValle agreed that this was a unique opportunity for Stony Brook to acquire some valuable territory on which to build.

But not everyone is so sanguine about the future of the campus. Pekka Paaonpera, the Finnish-born Australian director of public relations for Southampton College, would add only that "negotiations are continuing and as far as we know [Stony Brook is] looking into expanding something other than the marine science program." He offered few details, except to say that Southampton will cease to have an athletic program, although all students who transfer will have their scholarships honored. "Long Island University's main objective is for the campus to remain an academic institution."

And it is a reputation which Paola Curcio-Kleinman is keen to preserve. As associate vice president for marketing and public relations at LIU, she feels strongly that the few remaining graduate programs which will continue indefinitely at Southampton College "will remain an anchor for graduate education on the East End." The departments which have managed to evade the axe are: the English and Writing program, the Summer Writers Conference, the Teacher Education programs and Continuing Studies. WLIU and the Children's School will also stay open.

Whether the undergraduates whose departments are closing will indeed transfer to Stony Brook if the deal transpires is still markedly unclear. Part of the problem, explained Curcio-Kleinman, is that "[they] are not into the formal registration period for next fall yet, so it's hard to know exact numbers of who's going to transfer to the C.W. Post campus." There are currently 70 people signed up to transfer into Stony Brook's marine science program.

It's a sad ending for an institution which has shown bright promise over the years. Founded in 1963, Southampton College has produced 37 Fulbright Scholars from its 43 academic programs. The marine and environmental programs have become internationally renowned.

But as Southampton College President David Steinberg wrote in his June 2004 press release announcing the close, "many...have labored long and hard in pursuit of a dream that, sadly, now will not happen there." We can only hope that the dream, for students at least, will be picked up and nurtured by a welcoming and thriving academic community at Stony Brook.

Who's Here

By Debbie Tuma

Since 1983, Henry Uihlein has been entering elaborate and award-winning floats in the Montauk Friends of Erin's annual St. Patrick's Day parades. This year, he will be leading the parade.

Uihlein, 54, has been chosen as the Grand Marshal for the parade on March 20. He is no stranger to this parade route, having created and organized grand-scale floats that would rival even Disney creations. Some of his award-winning floats, between 1983-1997, were "Porgy and Bass," with giant fish towed on flatbed trucks, "Henry O'Shark," where he turned his pickup into the mouth of "Jaws," "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," where he rented real Disney costumes from Costumes of Suffolk, and dressed dozens of kids and adults to fit their parts, and "The Wizard of Oz," where he actually created four separate floats of characters, including a 25-foot helium balloon above his forklift, which carried Uihlein himself dressed as the Wizard. On the balloon, were the words, "There's No Place Like Montauk."

He also created two floats as tributes to some of Montauk's local legends, the late Henry Zebrowski, who taught gym, health and history at the Montauk Public School, and Dr. Gavino Mapula, a local doctor. For the tribute to "Mr. Z," as he was known, Uihlein ordered 120 red gym suits and shorts from the years he taught, and gathered as many students from Zebrowski's eighth grades going back to 1951, when he started teaching in Montauk. About 100 former students participated in this float, which included separate flatbed trucks with re-created basketball and baseball fields, square dancing, gymnastics and other sports he taught.

Uihlein also created a "Dr. Mapulittle" float when Dr. Mapula was grand marshal. "I turned my cherry picker into a great big sea snail, and we had people dressed up as giant ticks (for Lyme disease) and chickens (for chickenpox)," recalled Uihlein. "We had a choreographed dance, to the music of, 'Who Ya Gonna Call — Tickbuster!'" Uihlein recalled with a laugh that, "Dr. Mapula was a good sport."

Although Uihlein often captured the first prize award of $500 for his superlative floats, he never recouped his investments of about $3,000 to $5,000 per float. So why did he do it?

"I loved the fun and camaraderie of working together with my family and friends in creating these floats — in first thinking up the idea, and then seeing it come alive," he said. "It was never about winning, but just having a great time, in the middle of winter, doing something constructive for the whole community. Everyone loves the St. Patrick's Day Parade, and we all look forward to it as a symbol of spring, and the end of winter."

When asked how he feels about becoming this year's Grand Marshal, he grins, "I feel very flattered and honored that the Friends of Erin chose me. When Joey Bloecker called me and asked if I'd accept, I was shocked. Especially since I'm so young (ha ha.)"

Uihlein was also fortunate, as the owner of Uihlein's Marina in Montauk, to have at his disposal a number of assets in float-building, such as forklifts, cherry pickers, shrink-wrap, flatbed trucks and even boats, which he often used in his floats. But he attributed most of his success to "talented friends, like my nephew Roy Ehm, who has designed and constructed many of my floats."

Uihlein became such an expert float-builder, in fact, that he transferred his skills into creating even more floats for the East Hampton Kiwanis Club, where he has been elected President twice, and also serves on the board.

For the East Hampton Kiwanis Club, Uihlein has helped design the annual Santa Parade floats at Christmas, and he has also lent his vast wardrobe of Disney costumes. He helped create a large wooden sleigh and wooden soldier's costumes for such floats as "March of the Wooden Soldiers" and "Babes in Toyland." As a member of the Kiwanis Club since 1987, Uihlein has also run their annual Montauk Mercury Grand Slam Fishing Tournament every summer for the past three years from his marina, which has raised close to $65,000 for needy children.

"Like the Montauk Friends of Erin, the East Hampton Kiwanis Club is a great organization, which really does amazing things for the children and families of this town, and I love being a member," said Uihlein. "We have a really active club in East Hampton, with wonderful, talented and caring people."

When he's not building floats, attending Kiwanis meetings, or driving his seven-year-old son, Henry, Jr., to school, Uihlein is putting in long hours at his family's marina at the Montauk Docks, which he took over from his father, Henry Sr., after he died in 1977. Prior to that, Uihlein was a gym teacher at Shelter Island School, following in the footsteps of his own coach and teacher, Henry Zebrowski.

Uihlein's family alone could take up his whole life, since his clan extends from Freeport, Long Island to Florida. Uihlein has four older sisters — Mary, Charlotte, and Carol, and Jean, who died three years ago, plus 15 nieces and nephews, 30 great nieces and nephews, and countless cousins.

The Uihlein family has long-time roots in Montauk. "My parents first started coming out

It has come to eastern Long Island before. Many times. It is electrified. And it is enormous. It could be a danger to this operation if it heads this way today..."

Greeley looked from side to side. "Who IS this hombre?" he asked. "Get him out of here."

Armed security people moved swiftly through the folding chairs, and took him under both arms and removed him, kicking and shouting in some sort of South American Indian dialect that nobody could understand. "Any other questions?"

The freighter, with a great screeching noise, now pulled up alongside the Regasification Plant, which rolled about five degrees to the starboard from the impact, and then rolled back to upright. Its name was clearly visible on the side. GREAT LEADER KIM JONG IL FREIGHTER NUMBER TWO. It was almost the size of the re-gasification plant. Immediately, men in white jump suits appeared, and running around on the deck of both vessels, began the unloading process, carrying giant flexible hoses, wrenches and steel chains.

"I was just wondering, sir..." another man said.

"Could you identify yourself please?" Greeley asked.

"I'm a reporter for CBS News. I was wondering — this is a tourist destination, with lots of children and beaches and big yachts around. Would it be possible to build a giant canvas tent over the regasification plant, paint it green, have a cave entrance where the freighters could come in — it would keep all your workmen out of the rain — maybe a volcano on top where you could puff out black smoke, and a few palm trees around..."

"Is this man REALLY from CBS?" Greeley asked, looking around. "Hey, this is a serious re-gasification plant, not a joke. We're in it for the money. We're not gonna build some Walt Disney Mickey Mouse kind of thing. No way."

"Isn't it true that two out of three of the men who have to make the decision about this thing for the Federal Energy Commission have just been appointed by President Bush?"

"Get this guy out of here," Greeley continued, and the security men removed him too, kicking and screaming.

The freighter was unloaded with a great banging and hissing noise, the regasification plant rumbled, and then rerumbled back the other way, with the pipes shivering, as the process was reversed and the gas turned back to its liquid state. This took quite some time. And Greeley took some more questions, now smiling and laughing a bit as he answered them, and apologizing for the disturbance that had been made earlier.

"Well, that's about it," Greeley finally said. "I will wrap things up here, though the regas and degasification process will continue for about fifteen minutes after you leave."

At that moment, someone was hustled through the crowd.

"Ah, I see," Greeley said, "we have Governor Pataki. Mr. Governor, say a few words." He handed him the microphone.

Governor Pataki raised an index finger. "I..." he said.

"Thank you very much," Greeley said, snatching the microphone back. "Now everybody, that's a wrap, as you say here in the east, heh, heh, and thank you all for coming. Please leave down the metal stairs to your right."

Everybody got up and began heading for the stairs. As they were climbing down, the man with the sombrero appeared on an upper deck by a railing. Security men were trying to hold him.

"Everybody get out," he said. "The eel's been seen rounding Montauk Point. Everybody get off the ship!"

And then he was pulled away.

Greeley was still on the podium. He had been looking up. Now he spoke to the few remaining cameramen and reporters who were at the rear heading for the stairs.

"There's nothing to fear. What can an eel do? Admiral? Take me below. I want to watch the remainder of the regas and degasification process from the hold. And thank you all for coming everybody."

And then he was gone, down the hatch.

Everyone knows by now what happened just a few minutes later. With the governor and all the reporters and cameramen clear of the facility, people in the helicopters still circling overhead watched in awe as a giant 30-foot long Ecuadorian eel, glowing blue just below the surface of the water, came right for the far side of the freighter at what observers estimated was at least fifty knots. He crashed through the side as if it were paper, then moments later re-appeared out the side of the regasification plant and shot off in the direction of Noyac and Trout Pond, a body of water where he has, in the past, built an underwater nest.

And so the freighter and the plant, together, sank. As they went down, a huge white cloud of gas and steam rose from the ships — apparently several billion square feet of who knows what — and rapidly ascended into the atmosphere to spread out in a cloud that soon covered the area for as far as the eye could see.

Amazingly, on Monday morning, scientists at the Jet Propulsion Lab in Pasadena, California reported an extraordinary dip in the amount of greenhouse gasses in the stratosphere. Worldwide temperatures dipped one degree for a period of 48 hours.

"We think it's the combination of regasification and degasification going on at the same time at that accident on Long Island Sound, a chemical reaction that has never been attempted before, that may be the answer to global warming," a scientist there said.

We here at Dan's Papers will report further developments as we get them.

here on weekends in 1928, from their home in Ozone Park," he said. "They lived there and raised my four older sisters, and then they moved to Howard Beach, where I was born. They started building Uihlein's Motel in Montauk in 1952 and in 1956, they bought the marina, which was only a small building and a beach."

Uihlein, who was raised in the motel where his parents lived after his four older sisters had gotten married, said his father began repairing and renting boats at the private beach which they bought to go along with the motel.

"I was raised at the motel and marina, which was a bit different, because I didn't grow up in a house like other kids," he recalled. "I finally bought my own home, in Amagansett, in 1987, and I was so happy."

Although he graduated from the University of Tampa and got a Masters at New York University, with degrees in physical education, Uihlein continued to help his father with the marina, and his mother, Charlotte, who ran the motel. Charlotte Uihlein, also a Montauk legend, and who also participated in her son's floats, died last year.

Henry Uihlein said he looks forward to marching down the green-painted line on Montauk's Main Street, and also to the big Friends of Erin party at Gurney's Inn preceding the parade on Saturday night. "But I'm not looking forward to the Grand Marshal luncheon, because I know these guys will tease the hell out of me," he said. "They've never seen me in a kilt."

year to appeal the verdict. If they are approved, they become federally recognized and receive all the benefits which come along with that, including the right to establish a gaming industry and create treaties with the United States Government.

The importance of the October 17, 1988 date is that this is when The Indian Gaming Regulatory Act was passed. Potentially, the Department of Interior used this as a cutoff date for the newly proposed bill because it weeds out the chance of placing nations concerned specifically with gaming on a fast-track to recognition before dealing with nations who have applied with more honorable intentions.

The Shinnecock people have been a New York State-recognized, self-governing body since 1792. Originally, the decisions made for the Nation were left in the hands of adult male members of the tribe, but in an attempt to institute a more European governmental system, the Town of Southampton created a three-member trustee board that, since April 3, 1792, has met annually at Southampton Town Hall to elect tribal trustees. Despite the institution of the trustee system, the Shinnecock still maintain a democratic governing system within the tribe that gives all members of an appropriate age the right to vote on matters of the tribe. In addition to the open consensus system and the trustee system, they also have a Tribal Council of 13 elected members to deal with other matters of the Nation.

Federal recognition is high on the list of priorities for the Shinnecock and, in an attempt to stress the importance of this new bill, Lance Gumbs, Chairman of the Shinnecock Tribal Trustees was given the right to address the House Committee on Resources earlier this month. In a candid plea, he explained the particular plight of the Shinnecock people, their connection with New York State, the Town of Southampton and their native land. "This land has dwindled over the past 365 years, beginning with the early settlers who illegally seized these lands in the 17th century. Remarkably, we are still fighting every day to protect our land, despite the fact that the Shinnecock Indian Nation pre-dates the birth of America."

Since 2003, the Shinnecock have been considered "Ready, Waiting for Active Consideration," but have not progressed in "the never-ending queue" of waiting tribes. Although this new bill offers hope, it is not a given that the Shinnecock will be presented with Federal recognition, as the final decision is still left to the Secretary of Interior. The tone in Mr. Gumbs' address to the House seems to reflect the frustration of his people, who have spent endless time, money and resources on meeting the Bureau of Indian Affairs' laundry list of requirements for recognition.

Some have argued that the Shinnecock dragged their feet in meeting those requirements until talks of building a casino came into play, and how gaming is the sole purpose for recognition. Regardless, they did begin their petitioning a decade prior to the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act. Since 1988, the Bureau of Indian Affairs' recognition system has been overburdened with many nations which, seeing the prosperity of gaming facilities as the only way to preserve the land and native way of life, have sought for Federal status. Although the "native way of life" is constantly changing and American society and Shinnecock society are intermingled, fused over the 350 years of shared history, it is still important to establish tribal sovereignty and a nationally recognized identity apart from being considered American. Bill H.R. 512 may very well be another step in restoring self-government and Federally recognized identity to the Shinnecock, but first the bill must be passed by the Resources Committee . . . the House and Senate . . . and finally the President. It's not exactly a done deal.

Cablevision, the company that is probably the most hated on Long Island, has now achieved the dubious goal of becoming probably the most hated company in New York City because of its opposition to the New York City Olympic bid. If the City does not win the bid to build an athletic stadium on the west side, it will surely be because of the opposition of Cablevision, which believes that such a stadium will negatively affect Madison Square Garden, which Cablevision owns and which brings them a whopping 9% of their corporate

In a drastic move the day before Stephanie called her mother, Suffolk County District Attorney Thomas Spota took the lead in the international search. "They started Wednesday as if it was the first day of her being missing," child advocate Laura Ahearn stated. Later that day she was found.

Whether or not Stephanie's call home was influenced by the change in case control has not been released. In fact, little is being said in the wake of her safe return besides Suffolk Police Commissioner Richard Dormer's comment, "It could have been a lot worse. We know that."

Just how hated Cablevision is can be best understood by looking at the horrified public reaction to the company's decision to allow public-access TV applicants — public citizens all — to get their chance to produce a show of their own making on the public channel run by Cablevision not on a first come, first served basis as in the past, but on a twice-a-month lottery, whereby a Cablevision "computer" picks the winners.

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander #337 Transitions

I just can't start this article without first acknowledging the passing of Frank Klenawicus. Frank always represented to me one of the elder statesmen of the Island. He always had time to talk and had a simple, down-home view of everything. He was a breath of fresh air in the face of political correctness. I recall he enjoyed a big laugh once when I teased him that the plural of Klenawicus must be Klenawici (in reference to his big family). Spring on Shelter Island officially began the first time we saw him on his mower. He was great lesson in personal industry and the value of hard work. He will be greatly missed. God bless and keep him.

Another transition is coming up, as Tom's Stationary/Coffee Shop/Deli/Information Center/Place to Meet Everyone, changes hands in the spring to new owners. The coffee shop, located across the street from the school, has been in existence forever, it seems. I hung out there in high school, my daughter hung out there and maybe someday, her kids will call and say "Hi Mom. It's raining, can you pick me up at Carol's/Tom's/(fill in the blank)?"

For the new owners, I have some suggestions. First, there's not too much you have to change, and there are some things you have to keep.

#1 You have to keep selling the essential school supplies because every parent on the Island counts on it. Many is the morning I have stopped at Tom's for loose-leaf paper, pens, markers and such.

Of course, as long as I was there being a good Mom, I had no choice but to get a breakfast crescent and coffee, in order to further support Tom's. And as long as I was being a good Mom and a good citizen, I might as well be a good sister and pick up another breakfast sandwich for my brother.

And while waiting for the sandwiches, I might as well be a good friend and buy a cheerful card for a downcast friend. Maybe a little present, too. But it's important to be good to yourself, according to modern psychology, so I would get something for me as well. I can justify a new cryptograms or logic puzzles book. They're good for me because they reduce my stress. I would like to get a trashy gossip rag, but that would be politically incorrect. Oprah has banned the purchase of gossip rags by intelligent people.

Of course, my dear sweet mother isn't quite as intelligent or politically correct as I am and she likes an occasional gossip rag....so, I'll make the sacrifice and pick up a few for her. I, I mean she, especially likes the ones that show the actresses without any makeup.

So I'd sit outside enjoying my breakfast, working on puzzles and performing information gathering services. Everyone on Shelter Island drives past Tom's at least once a day. While you have breakfast, you watch who drives by and who's in their car with them. You can share this information with the people who are watching the roads up by the pharmacy and piece together any new alliances or break ups that people are trying to keep secret. Plus, if you notice a new duo driving by, you can check them out immediately by asking all the people coming into or going out of Tom's what they know about Mary and Murray who you just saw drive by together in Murray's truck. Sometimes, you'll hear that duo is old news. Sometimes you'll surprise the listener and then all the fun speculation can begin. There's nothing like a fresh rumor to start the day!

After breakfast, you've wasted enough time and it's time to go home. But why not save a trip to IGA and just grab a few after school snacks and drinks for the kids before you leave. And a lottery ticket. Possibly a newspaper. If it's mid morning and the crowd has thinned enough, you can sit and spin on the stools, regardless of your age. I have never lost my delight of a good spin on a stool. Like sliding in my socks on a slick floor, it's just for the wild side of my personality that no man can tame....

Therefore, in summary, my advice to the new owners is: You have to keep selling the essential school supplies because every parent on the Island counts on it.

Riverhead Art Deco Landmark, Denied Public Restoration Funds, Finds A Private Benefactor

By Karen Lund

Just as Robert Castaldi put the key in the front door of the Suffolk Theatre for the Performing Arts on Main Street in Riverhead, Meyer Segal pulled up to the curb and started honking his horn. When he had Robert's attention, Meyer asked if he could just peek inside the theatre that held so many memories for him. Robert waved him in with a smile and they both started a morning walk down memory lane.

Meyer, a resident of Riverhead since 1938, has many fond memories of the Suffolk Theatre. He pointed out that there was a candy store next to the theatre and that the phone booth was right where it always was. He also confided in a whisper, "I remember going up to the balcony, before I was married of course... but don't ask me why!"

This beautiful theatre was built in 1933 as part of the WPA Projects, of which the murals in Rockefeller Center in New York City and the Jones Beach band shell are a part. Amazingly, this Art Deco structure was built in only two and a half months, and has all the architectural characteristics of that era. The original tiling has a zig-zag pattern, imitating Egyptian motifs, and the building looks sleek with its rounded corners. In Art Deco everything comes in three's, so you enter the building through three main doors. The etched glass of flamingos can be found in the upstairs loge. Beautiful warm woods and tiling are all original, and the water fountain is a work of art with colorful ceramics and a fish motif. But the lights, also original, were dimmed in 1987 when competition from the modern multiplexes became too much for management to bear.

In 1994 the theater was purchased by Riverhead Town, and in 1999, in an effort to keep the property under municipal ownership, the Town Board, with a vote of 4-1, began working on a plan to issue a $4 million bond for its restoration. But that effort was halted by a referendum in 2001, led by lone dissenting Councilman Phil Cardinale (now Town Supervisor), who always supported private ownership of the property. Suffolk Theatre fans, fearing the building's complete demise, tried to generate enough votes to win the referendum. When that effort failed, privatization was again sought. A buyer did appear in 2003, but the deal fell through when financing could not be obtained.

And so the theatre remained shuttered until last week when the Castle Restoration & Construction Company went to closing on the building. At the ribbon cutting that followed, about 90 people enjoyed a reception and were able to take a peek at the house for the first time in well over a decade. For Castle Restoration's two partners, Robert Castaldi and Vincent Scandole, reality now sets in and the real work begins. The partners, who have worked on restoration projects such as the Old Custom House, Grant's Tomb and Cartier's in New York City, know the difference between renovating and restoring old buildings, and they will be doing both as they work on the Suffolk Theatre. When restoring, most attention is given to how the building looked, felt and functioned in its original time. When renovating, the building is adapted to new uses. Experts will be brought in to help with the restoration. The rich red velvet curtains that hang floor to ceiling need to be replaced and the medallions on the ceiling need to be carefully restored. The alabaster on the walls needs to be applied in an authentic way. The seats will all be replaced with larger seats that are staggered, and the projection booth will be replaced with digital technology.

The stage is only about 12-feet deep, so the company is adding an 80-foot building straight back from the stage. The stage will then be 35-feet deep and dressing rooms, a green room, carpentry shop and a chorus room will be added.

Evolving into a performing arts complex, the Suffolk Theatre will become the second largest theatre, with 800 seats, on the East End. (The largest is the Patchogue Theatre with 1200 seats.) And the stage will come alive as it hosts plays, comedies, musicals and operatic performances. Thematic movies weekends will provide Riverhead theatre-goers with a chance to see old movies produced by well-known directors. The theatre could also be used by community groups for music and dance recitals.

As Robert Castaldi escorted Meyer around, he explained that, "We've gotten such great support from the East End Arts Council. I just get the feeling that this is going to be a good partnership in bringing fine arts to Riverhead." His partner, Vincent Scandole, can't wait to roll up his sleeves and get going on the building. They have worked on similar projects in New York City, but this one is truly a labor of love. Vincent's eyes light up when he describes what is going to happen in the building over the next year. In addition to renovating and restoring the theatre, two storefronts on either side will be converted into bathrooms that are handicap-accessible. In addition, a service bar that will serve refreshments and "spirits" will be constructed. The upstairs loge will be renovated to accommodate a Director's Club with bistro tables and a working fireplace.

A not-for-profit community cultural organization will be created to manage the new center, and the partners are beginning to collect oral histories and memorabilia about the theatre. Contributions may be sent to suffolktheatre@aol.com

"This is not just about brick and mortar," said Vincent. "It's about memories. You can't just throw away history."

The Wines You Want This Weekend

In a vineyard's yearly life cycle, winter is probably one of the least exciting on the surface. Often called 'dormancy' because, well, the vines are dormant, vineyard workers are busy pruning, tying the vines and preparing the vineyard for the 2005 vintage. But tasting rooms are relatively quiet, making this a great time for serious wine drinkers to visit.

Without the swollen summer crowds or pumpkin-pickers, you can taste at a slower pace, chatting with tasting room staff and learning more than you probably could in the summer. Plus, if the winemaker wanders into the tasting room, he or she just might invite you into the back for a preview of upcoming releases.

If you go tasting this weekend, here's a handful of wines you should try. Some I've written about before, but most are excellent wines that haven't worked themselves into a column yet... but not because they aren't delicious.

Heading east on our northern-most wine trail - Sound Avenue, which turns into Route 48 in Mattituck - do yourself a favor and stop at Roanoke Vineyards in Riverhead. You'll be greeted with some deliciously well-balanced whites from Atwater Estates (a Finger Lakes winery) and your visit will be punctuated with the Roanoke 2000 Merlot ($38). It may seem a little pricey at first, but it's actually a bargain with amazing depth and complexity. Get it while you can - it's the vineyard's last varietal Merlot release as they move on to their Cabernet Sauvignon and Meritage releases in the fall.

Chardonnay may be the most-planted grape on Long Island, but I think Sauvignon Blanc grapes lead to some of our region's top whites. Macari Vineyard's 2003 Sauvignon Blanc Katherine's Field ($16) illustrates my point wonderfully. Crisp and refreshing, it's filled with lime and kiwi flavors, but without any of the harsh grassy/herbal flavors of New Zealand versions.

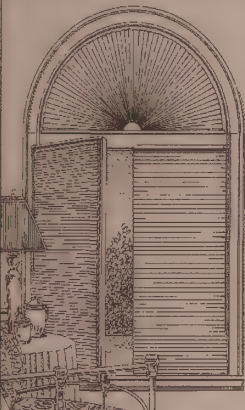

Riesling is another white varietal that does extremely well in our climate. If you like your Riesling dry and Alsatian in style, Waters Crest 2003 Riesling ($17) is sure to make you smile. It's my favorite Long Island Riesling and it's what I like to drink with spicy Thai take-out.

If red wines are more to your liking, Lieb Family Cellars released its 2002 Cabernet Franc ($28) over Valentine's Day weekend. They only made 125 cases of this rich, spicy wine with raspberry and plum flavors, so make sure you try it. For me, Cabernet Francs like this one are a strong argument against billing Long Island as a Merlot-centric region.

Another Cabernet Franc worth tasting is available in both The Tasting Room locations (Jamesport and Peconic). While maybe not as aromatic as the 2001 vintage, the Broadfields Wine Cellars 2002 Cabernet Franc ($18) is smoky and spicy with ripe black plum and vanilla accents.

Lastly, if you like Cabernet Sauvignon but find many Long Island versions thin and lifeless, try Lenz Winery's 2000 "Old Vines" Cabernet Sauvignon ($30). This is definitely not your average East End Cabernet. A deep, rich purple in the glass with excellent extraction, it offers full, ripe blackberry and raspberry aromas and flavors with hints of black cherry and smooth, supple tannins - all with a long, elegant finish. If I'm drinking a Long Island Cab, this is the one.

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

ARTS-IN-EDUCATION

Part III: "STRANDS" AT THE ROSS SCHOOL

What often distinguishes a good art program from an outstanding one are the professional, working artists who serve as teachers. The Ross School's Alexis Martino is one such instructor who is herself a fine photographer: her current exhibit at Ross is a prime example of her talents and insights.

Ms. Martino's photographs show an arresting command of technique and style, and offer substance as well, and normally we would be tempted to judge her works based on these qualities alone. But her artist's statement adds essential elements: her themes of myth and reality; the influence of philosopher Joseph Campbell; her own feminist and personal perceptions.

We are most intrigued by the connection between Ms. Martino's photographs and Joseph Campbell's "keys" to the mythic hero. We are reminded of the movie, Witness, which uses this same idea of the development of a hero. While Ms. Martino's photographic narrative is not literally akin to Harrison Ford's Philadelphia cop investigating a murder in the Amish country, the point is that Campbell's model is relevant in both the film and Ms. Martino's work.

It is this critic's belief that the primary concept behind Campbell's mythic hero is a "rite of passage," a common theme in the literary arts especially. We also see this "rite" established in Ms. Martino's photographs. What's interesting, however, is how she develops such an idea.

According to Campbell, an ordinary person living a commonplace life enters an unfamiliar world, is helped by a guide to survive and returns to his/her own world, carrying the lessons he/she has learned. While Campbell's actual model is more comprehensive, these basic stages form the substance of Ms. Martino's autobiographical journey: from the known, ordinary world (her childhood with cat in tow) to the unknown, even forbidden world (her teenage years with a snake as a companion, the snake being a particularly provocative symbol filled with sexual and philosophical implications). The last stage, her return to the familiar, real world, is seen in photographs where a woman holds her baby. We see then that the exhibit's title, "Strands," is an appropriate metaphor: each strand (element) can stand by itself as it also contributes to a complete entity. (Strands exist on their own as they also combine to create a whole head of hair.)

Ms. Martino is also exhibiting a video that explicates a similar theme, we think. In sharp contrast to the photographs, however, the home movie is deliberately rough, complete with a shaky camera. Yet it is still autobiographical, showing scenes of a birthday party with the artist's family and friends.

What's unusual about the developmental stages is the fact that the film starts with an unfamiliar world: we first see a large structure with European style architecture. Is it an estate or a government building that a young girl (our hero/artist) and her mother are walking toward? The return to the real world may be the scene where a couple cuts their wedding cake. In the video, the stages are out-of-order.

All the more thought provoking.

"Strands" will be on view at The Ross School (20 Goodfriend Drive, East Hampton) until April 1. The exhibit is located on the second level of the Senior Bldg. Please call for information and hours. Visitors must receive a visitor's pass. (631- 907-5238)

HONORING THE ARTIST: KAREN KERN

If ever there was someone who could be called "diversified," it's this week's cover artist, Karen Kern. Not only is Ms. Kern devoted to trap shooting, but she's also committed to meditation, Shiatsu massage, her three dogs and traveling, including yearly trips to Nice and Verona, Italy. She's a serious painter as well, known for her water scenes and images of fire trucks.

At first glance, Ms. Kern's various pursuits seem very different from one another. Yet there are connections. Trap shooting and painting, for example, require both focus and meditation skills, according to Ms. Kern. She especially likes talking about shooting, having just returned from Arizona where she and her husband participated in a trap shooting competition.

Shotguns have always fascinated Ms. Kern, although she is in no way an advocate for hunting animals. "When I was growing up, Annie Oakley was my hero," Ms. Kern explains. "I've started collecting old pictures of female trap shooters, too. There's nothing that empowers you more than putting a shotgun in your hands."

Yet there's an intriguing contradiction connected to Ms. Kern's interests. Despite Ms. Kern's penchant for shotguns, she also practices Shiatsu, a calming meditative massage technique. "I decided to take a tour to China," Ms. Kern notes. "There, I studied Chinese medicine and Shiatsu, training in a Beijing hospital. I then went back some years later with my husband."

Regardless of Ms. Kern's travels around the world (including trips for trap shooting contests in England) she is very much attuned to her local environment and particularly her own Centerport neighborhood. "I read where Arthur Dove, the Abstract Expressionist, used to live on my street," she says with enthusiasm. "I was so fascinated that I read his biography, discovering that he and his wife lived on a houseboat. I never get tired of walking past his house on my walks."

Walking through her neighborhood also proved interesting for Ms. Kern in another way: "One day, I saw this woman with a most unusual dog, and I stopped to ask what breed it was. It was a Brussels Griffon, and I fell immediately in love with it. I ordered one from Texas, sight unseen, and now it accompanies me when I go trap shooting."

And it was the Centerport locale that inspired Ms. Kern to move from New York in the first place. "A friend invited me to lunch and suggested I rent the house she was now living in. It just fell into my lap,"

Ms. Kern explains with more enthusiasm. "It's like a little hamlet here, like a New England town."

It's apparent that Ms. Kern's environment covets a lot of energy and motivation. This week's cover "Canoe on the Nissequogue River" is a prime example. This image possesses the kind of color that Ms. Kern finds to be essential in her work. Use of color is also important because it recalls the training she received from Audrey Flack when she was Ms. Flack's assistant after college graduation.

While it would be somewhat difficult to predict what Ms. Kern might be doing ten years from now, it's certain that she will be involved in a myriad of pursuits, all equally inspirational.

— Marion Wolberg Weiss

Ms. Kern's work is on view in Sag Harbor at 125 Main Street until March 31. Her website is: www.karenkernfineart.com

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood 1n The Hamptons

The Grand Old Movie World, as we know, love and hate it, has a funny way of dealing with personal identities. It has a set of casting molds into which they pour either sickly sweet chocolate or a rather terrible substance that looks like chocolate, but tastes UGH! The casts popped out of the molds do not always match the taste. It's their way of giving us some variety. An Easter Bunny character may leave a terrible taste; however, most of the time you get what you see. Rarely are we surprised by a tangy, explosive cordial center that boggles the senses. If you thought imported films were different – think again.

Rory O'Shea Was Here is of Irish descent and, I do mean descent. A steep tumble into the sticky abyss of molten sweetness, then dumped into the much used form of the handicapped person. It's difficult to pan a movie that works hard at getting its audience to understand and accept the physically challenged, but when a film reinforces tired old molds rather than attempts to add more edifying ingredients, we feel that we are being used. Rory O'Shea is admirably portrayed by James McAvoy as he runs about courageously in a wheelchair operated by two of his useable fingers. He has stylishly spiked hair and a mouth that also runs on like an out-of-control milk truck spewing spiteful blarney; and we are supposed to love it 'cause he's been stricken with muscular dystrophy. Not content with "doin' good," Rory O'Shea Was Here has to do better.

It doubles the pleasure and doubles the fun (if not the pain) by adding a buddy, a young man with cerebral palsy who cannot speak. They meet doing time at a very serious home for the disabled. You know by the glint on Rory's nose ring that he's bound to break out and he does, taking his pal Michael, played by Steven Robertson, who also has the heartbreaking spirit one expects of a courageous movie.

With all the frustration and zeal of average young men, the two take Dublin by surprise – complete with pub brawls over women. They even hire a sexy looking caretaker, Ramola Garai. Don't go there! The filmmakers don't. They never ask for pity even though the boys' handicaps stand out like – well, handicaps. The director and writer also never give the boys thoughts of the future. They may harbor desires, but they're never stated or implied. If you like, you may shed a tear or emit a muffled blubber. The director and the composer who did the music sure tried hard enough to get them going. Rory, himself, has the good sense to try to stifle them.

In the documentary The Nomi Song, we are made aware that true individual identities can burst into life almost spontaneously and take energetic flaming form, at times burning hotly from the friction of contrary normalcy. When the German, classically trained operatic singer, Klaus Sperber, came to this country in the 1970s he took creative flight within the challenging underground art scene. The Pop Culture scene took notice. It wasn't just because of his piercingly brilliant counter tenor voice. His small androgynous body was outfitted in garish garb which invariably included a transparent cape and his petit doll-like face made up in Japanese Noh Theatre style. All this, plus a vaudevillian flare for New Wave happenings, had him appearing in shows that became legends. He took the name Nomi. In one of his songs, capable today of ripping out your heart, he fragiley articulated the lyrics, "If they saw my face could I still take a bow? Will they know me, Nomi, know me now."

I repeat, as in the past, that documentaries should not be taken as fact even though the footage is all actual. As made by Andrew Horn, this film is beautifully wrought and singularly precise and competes easily with cast-iron made dramas. Nomi's early death in 1983 of AIDS, know then only as "gay cancer," creates real tragedy.

Guy Jean de Fraumeni is the producer/writer/director of award-winning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at major film and TV award competitions, including the Oscars, the Emmys and various film festivals. He is assisted by Sarah Halsey.

Oceans of Hope

For the fifth year, the Riverhead Foundation for Marine Research and Preservation is holding its annual Oceans of Hope Benefit at Riverhead's Atlantis Marine World Aquarium. This year the benefit will honor Suffolk County Executive Steve Levy and, model/actress/activist Christie Brinkley for their dedication to the shorelines, ocean and the underwater ecosystem.

This year's event comes after a very taxing, yet rewarding, year for the Foundation. Over the past several months the Riverhead Foundation has cared for and rehabilitated Rocky, a juvenile male Risso's dolphin. This is the first dolphin of its kind to be rehabilitated in the United States, but the cost of caring for Rocky and several injured seals is astronomical, reaching in the hundreds of thousands.

Part educational, part make-believe, the venue is fantastic, a monument to the great civilization of Atlantis. It seems only fitting to hold a benefit for an organization filled with the same idealism and character as the mythical culture. The benefit will be held Saturday, March 5th. For more information and tickets please call 369-9840.

theatre review: brooklyn boy...by gordin & christianano

Mid-life success, divorce, and the death of a parent are some of the issues thrust upon the novelist at the center of Donald Margulies' new play Brooklyn Boy, which the Manhattan Theatre Club in association with South Coast Repertory recently opened on Broadway. An author in his late forties, who, after many years of struggle is in the midst of his greatest success with his latest novel, returns to the Brooklyn of his childhood, where his ailing father has been hospitalized. Once there he is forced to compare the boy he was with the man he has become.

Mr. Margulies is a gifted playwright who has given us numerous plays and whose Dinner With Friends won the Pulitzer Prize for Drama. Last season his play Sight Unseen, which had been a Pulitzer Prize finalist, was successfully revived on Broadway. Brooklyn Boy, which may very well be the prolific writer's most personal account to date is somewhat semi-autobiographical and is his first play to be originally mounted on the great white way. In it, he recounts the story of a Jewish boy from Brooklyn, who has become a mini-celebrity with the publication of his best-selling book, which he insists is fiction and which is now primed for a Hollywood adaptation. The book turns out to be less fiction than he originally wanted to admit and is the catharsis for his coming of age maturity.

The play, although well intended, is a somewhat cliché ridden comment about the perils of being Jewish in our American culture, the difficulties of maintaining our artistic integrity in our success-oriented society, as well as the nature of the parent/child relationship. The evening, under the competent direction of Daniel Sullivan, moves along at an entertainingly smooth pace, but ironically misses the heart of the story it was intended to convey. Everything seems real on the surface, but the life force of the subtext is missing. There is something all too neat and compartmentalized about the entire evening, the direction, the acting and even the story itself, which makes comments instead of active demonstrations. Often it is quite amusing, but at the sacrifice of the real truth at the heart of the matter. One hesitates to criticize such a heart-warming story, but there is more depth here than has been presented.

The author, Eric Weiss (Adam Arkin), given the birth name of Harry Houdini, has spent his life trying to escape his Jewish Brooklyn roots. He spends his time in Brooklyn moving between his dying father (Allan Miller), a childhood friend (Arye Gross), and his soon to be ex-wife (Polly Draper). On a trip to California he encounters a stereotypical tough bitch studio executive (Mimi Lieber), an egotistical TV actor (Kevin Isola) who wants to play against type in the film of Eric's novel, as well as a sweet young valley girl (Ari Graynor) whom he brings back to his lavish hotel suite. Uncertain at first of how to navigate the intersection of family, career, and friends where he finds himself with his return to Brooklyn and the success of his novel, he ultimately learns the way. The irony is that his first success comes from using his real memories for the first time, and fulfillment is earned not from distancing himself from who he is, but by embracing it.

All the actors are excellent, indeed, but the direction leads them astray, I feel. What we get instead of the struggle to relate is an impassioned, demonstrated glibness that is slick on the surface. The effort to cover the feelings would be more interesting, with fleeting glimpses of the truth beneath.

The set design by Ralph Funicello is truly wonderful, evoking a respectable middle class Brooklyn apartment building. The set shifts from the hospital room, to Eric's apartment, to the Hollywood office, and the hotel suite, and all are beautifully handled and handsomely suggestive.

Brooklyn Boy is an engaging and funny evening in the theatre, but as a fan of Donald Margulies I had hoped for much more.

Brooklyn Boy opened at the Biltmore Theatre 261 West 47th Street on February 3, 2005. Tickets are available by calling 212-239-6200 or at www.telecharge.com or at the box office.

Away At School... By David Lion Rattiner

I Hate Paying Bills

If there is one thing in the world that I hate more than anything, it is spending money on things that I think should just naturally occur. Buying food is my latest target for these things that I hate spending money on. Almost everyday, I spend around twenty dollars on food. In the morning, I spend five bucks on breakfast. Then ten bucks on lunch, and then another ten bucks on dinner. So, now that I think about it, it is more like twenty-five bucks a day. If you do the math, that is one hundred dollars every four days or one hundred and seventy five dollars every week! All just so I don't starve to death. Let us also not forget that this does not include going out to dinner, snacking at the movies or having a couple of beers on the weekend.

Paying for food is a nightmare. I talked to my friend about this who told me that he tries to cook more often. Last week, I bought sixty dollars worth of groceries. I bought eggs, milk, pasta, chicken, sausages - everything. I was so excited about this because I figured that this was going to cut my food expenses in half. I could do this every week for the rest of my life. Just think about how much money I would save.

Well, a problem arises with this as well. Whenever there is food in my apartment I can't stop eating it. I would say that I eat about three times as much food as a human being should when there is a lot of food in my refrigerator. After about three days, the majority of the sixty dollars of groceries was gone except for some peanut butter and a couple of eggs. Other than that, I was cleaned out. Then, of course, I am too lazy to go back to the grocery store, so I go back to my twenty-five dollar a day routine. Does everybody do this? How do people eat? Nobody ever really taught me.

The other thing that I can't stand paying for every month is cable and Internet. I don't get why people have to pay for this. You can just walk to work or the library and you got the Internet for free. Heck, I think that you can even walk into certain coffee shops and you can get free wireless Internet. Honestly, is the Internet that big of a deal? Is it really worth the thirty to fifty dollars a month that people pay? I certainly don't think so. The Internet isn't even something that I find entertaining anymore. I hate reading on computer screens now, too. I would much rather read from a newspaper than a computer screen. The only reason I use the Internet is to check my e-mail and read cnn.com. Oh, I forgot, I also pay my Internet bill using online banking. That is always an interesting transaction.

Television is the other thing that gets me. It should be free for crying out loud! I watch more commercials than I do shows these days. In fact, I talk with my friends more about funny commercials than I do about the actual shows. This isn't fair! But no, you want television, that's going to cost you another fifty bucks a month. Oh, and if you want to buy HBO (which is the only thing worth watching anyway) that will be an extra twenty dollars a month. I wish you could just buy the HBO and not have to pay the fifty bucks for the crap shows that are on. You should purchase television by the station. There really are only four channels that I watch on television, HBO, TBS, FOX, and NBC. I never watch anything else.

The one that gets me more than anything is by far the electric bill that I get every month. That bill is so ridiculous it is...yahhhh roar ahhhhh ridiculous. It should be illegal how much money it costs to pay for heat. It is absolutely, utterly ridiculous. Every single time I get that electric bill in the mail I say a secret prayer that somehow the electric company made some kind of accounting error and I am going to get the heat for free. But no, the prayer is never answered. It is just so ridiculously expensive to pay for heat. Sometimes I think that I would be better off hiring a guy to run around the apartment and use his body heat to heat the place. I absolutely hate paying for heat.

Like this very moment, my computer is using watts of electricity that I have to pay for. At this very moment, it is like there is a guy from the electric company that is taking money out of my wallet. But he is invisible, so I can't punch him in the face. I just let him take my money. I better get used to this whole bill paying thing, however, because it only gets worse as time goes on. For the time being, however, I'm seriously considering moving into the Northeastern Library. You got free heat, rent and Internet. All I need to do is get a makeshift bed in there, and then I could just shower every day at the Northeastern gym which is included in the tuition of the school. You know what? This really isn't that bad of an idea the more I think about it.

When In Manhattan... BY OLIVER PETERSON

The Church of Poetry

Over 9 years and what seems a lifetime ago, I watched Allen Ginsberg perform pieces from his newest and last non-posthumous book for "Mixed-up Time-travel" at the Saint Mark's Church. In those days, punk rock ruled my lifestyle and poetry defined my paper-bag-and-beer-on-the-stoop existence. Sallow fans grasping at the venerable Beat legacy drew psychedelic portraits of their hero; they bobbed heads and tapped fingers beneath the vaulted ceilings, or whispered to one another and pointed out Gregory Corso and others hidden in the pew-riding crowd. Ginsberg died just short of 6 months after that October night in the East Village. I couldn't afford the book he was signing and hadn't thought to bring one of my own, but I left there with the pleasure of having shaken his hand. I smoked cigarettes with Kim Deal, of The Breeders and The Pixies, I heard good music, and got to see first hand how Ginsberg earned the reputation of being able to read anything and make it sound brilliant.

It wasn't the first or last time I'd been to the Poetry Project at the church, but it was the most memorable. I'd sat in on many readings and events sponsored by various journals and magazines that accepted not one of my "brilliant" works. Maybe they'd remember me? Maybe I'd get that "in"? I walked past the graveyard and that wrought iron fence on an almost daily basis. Sometimes I conversed with the various human beings deteriorating on the outlying benches. Other times, during my more gentrified (and sometimes, ashamedly, more happy) moments, headed to Urban Outfitters on 2nd Avenue to buy hip clothes and Jesus action figures. Ginsberg said, "The Poetry Project burns like red hot coal in New York's snow." After more of this horrid weather and the death of another brilliant, counter-culture hero with a pen this week (Hunter S. Thompson), I could use some warming up.

The Poetry Project in the landmark St. Mark's Church in-the-Bowery is one of the most recognized and respected forums for original and inventive poetry in the country. They offer 3 weekly reading series, writing workshops, a bimonthly newsletter, tape and document archives, support for poets of all shapes and size, and to top it off, The World. Okay, not The World - but an annual literary magazine of the same title. Since the Project's founding in 1966, hundreds of poets, writers and performers, including John Ashbery, Alice Walker, John Cage, Sam Shepard, Amiri Baraka, Terri McMillan, Robert Creeley, Kenneth Koch, Patti Smith, Yoko Ono, Michael Ondaatje, and of course Allen Ginsberg, have participated in the Poetry Project. But it's not all about the big names. St. Mark's Church is deeply focused on encouraging young or unknown poets and creators to get their work into the world. The "Tiny Press Center" collects reams of chapbooks and self-published collections from poets and writers around the world. The archive is a beautifully imperfect picture of the many voices crying out, with simple books made from stapled Xeroxes, to the slightly more professionally printed. They ask us to hand poetry out on the street. E-mail it, or leave them on our answering machines. "The world needs it."

Visual art always seems to follow closely behind poetry. The Poetry Project supports it as well. Through their web site, works from Donald Baechler, Claes Oldenburg, Alex Katz, Francesco Clemente/Allen Ginsberg, and Elizabeth Murray are for sale. We can pray to all creativity in this house of The Lord. Paintings, poems, performance, oh my! I already feel better. If you appreciate any of these things, it would behoove you to stop by. If you like it, become a member and have access to all manner of featured reading, open mic., and workshop. Sure, poetry has the potential to be one of the most gag-inducing things on this planet when done poorly, but sometimes you can witness true brilliance and a soul exposed raw. Either way, sincerity always has merit.

St. Mark's Church is located at 131 E. 10th St., New York, NY 10003. Check out www.poetryproject.com for more information, including membership packages and event schedules.

CLASSIC CARS WITH BOB GELBER

Showstoppers. That's the dream of every new car manufacturer. A showroom stopper that draws crowds to the dealership when it is introduced provokes oohs and aahs from onlookers and ultimately leads to hordes of new car buyers.

It doesn't happen often, but some of you out there probably remember certain special cars that drew you to dealerships to "get a closer look," which was the case with many post WWII automobiles. Certainly, 1949 was a pivotal year for the Ford Motor Car Company and General Motors. This was the year all of the new sleek postwar car designs were introduced. It was the beginning of the cruise-a-matic and tailfin era. It was the reemergence of the American dream of owning the road in affordable modern cars that looked like jets. Everyone could be Buck Rogers while being financially able to own their own Levittown home. Car buyers flocked to showrooms to get a closer look at the new $1,900 Fords and Chevys. In 1949, every car was a showstopper.

This was also the new era of the show car circuit, which certainly resembled Broadway in some of its production extravaganzas. Pretty girls in skimpy outfits were always on display along with the gleaming new car models which, more often than not, were mounted on giant turntables. There was the MotorRama, and WonderRama combined with the Lama Lama Ding Dong background music. Don't forget, this was the era of overdone flashy chrome, and some of these garishly lit show cars took on the aura of jukeboxes.

Harley Earle was the head of design for GM during this period and some of his inspired show cars, now called "concept cars," were truly showstoppers. I don't know why, but it was the GM policy to destroy their show cars after they made the "MotoRama" circuit.

which had to sadden Earle. Just last month at a major auction, a very rare GM fifties concept car was auctioned off for over $300,000. It was reputed to have been secreted out of GM's garage in pieces just before it went to the crusher. As today, many radical design elements in the show cars hinted of things to come in future production cars.

There have been many showstoppers through the years. Of course, the 55 Chevy and Fords brought the house down. The two stars of that show were the new Corvette, which was actually introduced in 54, and the Thunderbird. Chrysler also introduced its amazing 300 horsepower hemi engined 300, the most powerful car in those days. Notice that all of these show stoppers are from the big three automakers. No one had ever heard of Toyota, Honda and the rest...yet. However, there was a sports car movement slowly starting in this country that in fact was the reason for the introduction of the Corvette and Thunderbird in the mid-fifties. The diminutive British MG was the most popular seller, but there were two other cars that were reputed to be excellent machines with names that were rather strange to American ears, Ferrari and Porsche. If ever an out-of-tune song could be melodic, there was one other rather strange looking car that soon had people flocking to the showrooms: the Volkswagen Beetle. It was a hit, not because of its looks, but because it was gaining a reputation as a well-built car that seemingly ran forever and was really good on fuel. Plus it was inexpensive, not a bad resume.

Certainly, over the years, there have been many other showstoppers, but nothing like the postwar era when there seemed to be new crazy and wild cars popping up yearly. Those that awed me in the past were the sixties era Dodge Superbird, which has become the most valuable Dodge ever. I had to see this one in person and was amazed that any designer would put such an absurdly large Cessna type wing on a car. The Porsche 928 drew me into the showroom because it is truly a rare day when Porsche designs anything that looks different from a 911. The same can be said now for the new Porsche SUV. And, oh my god, there was the Jaguar XK-E, and the Mercedes 300 SL Gullwing.

The newest show stoppers are the freshly minted Ford Mustang coupe and Chrysler 300C four-door sedan. These cars are retro looking and are luring buyers and "lookers" into the showrooms just like the old days. Simply put, they are just good looking rides. As I recently commented, the new Mustang is a little too retro for my taste, but it sure is purty. The Chrysler is probably the best looking four-door in production in the world. And these are American. If Harley Earle is looking down, he's smiling.

Shop 'til You Drop... With Maria Tennariello

The snow is back, but it hardly kept me from shopping...I got into my snowmobile and off I went...Let's shop!

Starting out in Hampton Bays, I stopped into Val's Closet on Main Street, (love this shop) for a look at the designer and accessories sale of the year...it's called an "Overstock Sale" and there are over 100 items priced at $19.99 and over and 100 more items that are slashed to $29.99 and over. This tremendous sale allows everything to fly out the door in order to make room for spring fashions. My advice is to get there before there is nothing left...Thank goodness I did.

On Cameron Street in Southampton, Charos Custom Sound is having a "Clearance Sale" and every week you will find new and fun specials. Stop in and check it out, you might find just what you have been looking for, at a great price...

While you're shopping Jobs Lane in Southampton, stop into Rags for a blast of their huge "Fall/Winter Sale." It is still not too late to purchase beautiful cashmere sweaters from Vince and Inhabit. Also check out some great fall selections by Tocca. I found an amazing selection of designer jeans here at Rags and you should ask them about their Chip and Pepper selections... the brand-new spring fashions will be in by mid-March, so get going, that early bird always catches the worm.

A very special "Winter Inventory" sale at Country Gear Ltd. on Main Street in Bridgehampton is now in progress...I popped in to see what was on the menu here and you will love the dining tables that are imported from England and Italy. I especially loved the beautifully crafted tables in pine. Cherry and walnut are also available in various sizes and designs and are ready for immediate delivery. The reduced pricing offers will be in effect through February and March. Spring is around the corner, so now is the time to re-do...Call them at 537-1032 for information about this sale.

Well, this shop has been around a long time...it's called Country Living and is located on Montauk Highway, East Hampton (east of the Water Authority). Country Living is now celebrating their twenty-fourth anniversary in East Hampton and is having a "Store-Wide Sale" that will knock your block off...Look for a cool 30% off all hand-painted furniture, vintage and one-of-a-kind pieces; all tables; lamps, old and new; pictures; prints; and old photographs. There is also a nice selection of china and glass (my favorites) that is 30% off the already affordable prices. Be sure to stop here, it's a hidden treasure of a shop, for sure.

I stopped into East Hampton's A Little Of What You Fancy on Newtown Lane, where they have just received their Kerry Cassil spring shipment. Kerry is from Laguna Beach, California and this shop carries her entire collection of Indian cotton textiles. The clothing is perfect for the Hamptons. They are casual, comfy, very hip, and usually sell out as soon as they arrive here, so best get there early for the best selections. Their stock of baby clothing is back in addition to bedding and tabletop linens. Also available are Angela Adams' (a textile designer from Maine) wonderful wool area rugs for every room in the house. Also from Maine, The Fancy has very elegant table settings and serving sets made from humble clam, mussel and lobster shells. From New York City, John Derian's decoupage plates make the perfect gift. In order to make room for new merchandise, this "Housecleaning Sale" is not to be missed...Trust me on this one. Call 324-3113 for information.

Moving on to Sag Harbor, my hometown, I had to stop into In Home on Main Street for a look at the Calvin Klein "Special Sale" that includes Calvin's basic terry towel collection as well as an assortment of popular colors in bath towels that are now $15, hand towels now $10.50, bath sheets in three different sizes on sale from $50 to $45. Keep in mind this is a very special sale in this very special shop, so get going while the flavor lasts...Thanks, John and David for making my shop readers happy with this sale.

Until next week. Ciao and Happy Winter Shopping!

If you have any shopping questions, or if your shop is having a sale, or has something special that I should know about, please e-mail me at: shoptil@danspapers.com or by fax at: 631-537-3330. I would love to hear from you.

CAMPS & RECREATION

Ten Years And Counting At The Art Farm

It's hard to believe that the Art Farm will be celebrating its ten year anniversary. This unique summer fun camp that started with humble beginnings has grown into quite the popular place for kids in the Hamptons. Owner and founder Mari Linnman, had the foresight to create a place where parents can send their children to enjoy hours of educational, fun, and challenging programs.

One of Mari's original concepts which makes the Art Farm so special is the incorporation of farm animals. Children will learn how to care for and feed baby ducklings, chicks, bunnies, goats, sheep and even a potbelly pig. Exposing children to animals teaches the little ones how to be responsible and nurturing. This unique facet of the Art Farm is an example of the truly well-rounded programs they offer.

The Art Farm has also created a great athletic program that includes tennis, skateboarding, basketball, martial arts, and soccer, just to name a few. Each category of sports is broken down into different age brackets. For example, there is a tennis program that includes 1 1/2 hours of instruction for ages 6-14. Private lessons are also offered.

Watersports have also been added to the summer session. Only three years into this program, the school has expanded their water fun to wakeboarding, surfing, windsurfing, and swimming. Each lesson is taught by local professionals who will instruct your child on how to use state-of-the-art equipment and sharpen their skills in the latest high-tech, cutting-edge watersports. This has become a main attraction especially with older kids. Each program offers the choice of a separate sport package that will provide endless hours of fun.

Children will go to Main Beach in East Hampton for surfing and Long Beach for water skiing and wakeboarding. The Art Farm provides half day or full day sessions for all programs. Many children only sign up for the watersports programs while others prefer to try their hand at a little of everything.

Another interesting aspect of the Art Farm is their Farmer's Market with an emphasis on learning to bake. Children will even be involved in a charity bake sale. In 1998, at the very first bake sale, they raised $513. In 2004, they made $10,000, which was donated to Heifer International, a charity that benefits families struggling to support themselves. The Art Farm is also involved in many other charitable organizations such as "Mari's Children," which will benefit an orphanage in Sri Lanka. They will also be donating 5 spaces to inner city children through the Fresh Air Fund this summer.

In addition, there is The Art Farm in the City that Mari and her NYC partner Valentina opened in 2000. They added a Mommy and Me Program created after Mari had her son, Jordan. She felt the need to share the experience of fun programs with her son. These interactive classes allow mother and child to share a special bonding time together. They have an animal care program designed for children ages 3-6 years-old and an art class that will bring out the best in your future little artist for ages 14 months to 4 years-old, just to name a few. The city location (located at 419 East 91st Street) serves as the perfect fun adventure for both moms and kids to indulge in as well as a summer camp for 3-6 year olds (July & August).

The Art Farm programs will be held in the Hamptons from July 5th through August 26th. Admission is rolling and children can be signed-up for half or full day programs tailored to their interests and hobbies. Programs range from one to eight weeks depending on availability. Half-day programs are from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. and a full day of fun is from 9:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

Their equipment and classrooms are located at the Hampton Day School at the Morriss Center. For more information, please log onto www.theartfarms.org or call 631-537-1634. For The Art Farm In The City call 212-410-3117.

Hiking The Winter Wonderland

The East End is home to an abundance of hiking trails for outdoor enthusiasts to choose among. And if learning about the environment and experiencing nature appeals to you, you don't have to let the chill of winter deter you from stepping out. I was fortunate enough to attend the last class in a series titled, "Nature In Winter" led by naturalist, author and columnist for The Southampton Press, Mike Bottini.

The first in this winter series started several weeks ago with a hike at Stony Hill, the second was held at Barcelona Neck, and for the finale, we hiked Point Woods in Montauk. The hikes focused on how native flora and fauna adapt during the winter. For the Point Woods hike, 11 eager hikers, including our leader, gathered in the early morning at Camp Hero Road.

Of course everyone was appropriately dressed, except me. Next time I'll make sure to wear warmer socks and heavier winter gloves. A few minutes after 9 a.m. we began our journey across the highway and on to the Point Woods Trail. Mike Bottini designed this particular trail in 1998 and it has become a favorite among hikers in Montauk because of its rich history.

From the moment we entered the wooded terrain, we were surrounded with a variety of beautiful, tall trees. And like humans, each had distinctive characteristics that separate them from each other. Mike explained that most of the trees in this area have been around for hundreds of years. Ages of trees can vary according to their growth over the years. For example, a specific tree may have roots that are 200 years old, but, because of breakage, their top branches may only be 50 years old.

One of the first encounters on our journey was with a tall Tupelo (also known as Black Pepper or Southern Gum). Tupelo is a common tree that thrives in swampy areas. Their branches can reach to great heights (making them more vulnerable to break off during the windy season) and the bark has a smooth texture.

As we continued on our hike, I could only hear the rustling of leaves and the snapping of twigs in this tranquil setting. We crossed over a stream and stopped for a few minutes to learn about Skunk Cabbage. Skunk Cabbage has the largest native leaves on the South Fork and can live for nearly 1,000 years. It's impressive to see this green-leaf plant alive and well in the dead of winter. Mike told us that the temperature of the inside of the plant has been documented to be much warmer than that of its surrounding environment.

Next we stumbled upon an empty fox den. Foxes will reuse abandoned dens year after year, making them very conservative and resourceful. Perhaps they can be an example for some of us who like to "overbuild"?

The dens usually have two entrances, but we only found one at this particular location. It appeared as though the inhabitants were there not too long ago. I guess they upgraded to a duplex?

The brisk air didn't feel that cold anymore. I think we were so focused on our surroundings the weather seemed inconsequential. That is unless we were standing in a pool of cold water with a bunch of Fairy Shrimp. Mike told the group that if we came back during the evening to this specific body of water with a flashlight, we would see schools of Fairy Shrimp swimming. I've never heard of Fairy Shrimp, but it seems they live on the East End along with the Blue-spotted, Marbled and Red-back Salamanders.

As the wind picked up and the temperature dropped, we knew we were approaching the seal haul-out area (plus the signs were a big clue). The excessive force of wind was a good indication that there might not be any seals in sight. In fact, two lone hikers heading past us in the opposite direction informed us that seals were nowhere to be found. But we continued on to the new seal haul-out shed.

We all looked on, each one of us hoping to see one pop its head out of the water, but no such luck. Maybe next time.

Although we didn't get to observe those cute creatures of the sea, we certainly enjoyed observing and learning about many other inhabitants in the area.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

Jacques Pepin is hardly an unfamiliar name. He is the author of numerous award-winning cookbooks, has starred in his own PBS television series for the past 20 years and has won several prestigious culinary awards. From the mid-seventies through the 1980's I had the splendid experience of working with Jacques when he guest taught at my former cooking school, Cooktique in Tenafly, New Jersey.

Born and kitchen-trained in France, Jacques, who has taught millions how to cook through his books on classic French cuisine, is forever the pragmatist. His new cookbook, Fast Food My Way, Houghton Mifflin, 2004, is the companion volume to his new series on public television. The recipes in his latest "new born" may not all be necessarily quick, but they pay tribute to a simple cuisine that does not require a lot of work. It's all a question of organization and minimal planning. If a dish such as oven-roasted salmon takes seconds to season and about 40 minutes to slow roast, the sun-dried tomato salsa can be prepared while the fish bakes with time to spare. I adapted his asparagus with shallots which take minutes to cook, after trimming the asparagus, for a delectable vegetable side dish. Inspired by frog's legs with garlic and parsley, Jacques adapted the classic recipe using chicken breasts, to my great delight. Timid about eating frog's legs, the aroma of the buttery garlic parsley dressing is oh-so-good. So thank you, Jacques.

For me dessert is a special occasion treat. And in this superbly photographed book Jacques has provided me with a multitude of appealing desserts for that right moment.

Armed with proper technique and quality kitchen equipment, you too can have fast food your way!

ASPARAGUS WITH SHALLOTS

For this recipe Jacques suggests the conventional method of sautéing asparagus rather than steaming or poaching.

4-6 servings

- 1 pound thin to medium asparagus
- 1 tablespoon extra-virgin olive oil
- 4 - 5 shallots, cut into thin slices (3/4 cup)
- 1 - 1 1/2 tablespoons unsalted butter
- 1/2 teaspoon coarse (kosher) salt
- 1/4 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper

1. Break off stem ends of asparagus where they naturally bend and discard. Trim lower half of stalks with a vegetable peeler. Rinse and pat dry with paper towels. Cut asparagus on the bias into 2-inch lengths.

2. Heat the oil in a large skillet over medium heat. Add the asparagus and shallots and cook, stirring occasionally, for 7 - 8 minutes (a few minutes longer if asparagus are not thin) or until asparagus is just tender. Stir in the butter, salt and pepper and toss to mix. Serve hot or warm.

CHICKEN BREASTS WITH GARLIC AND PARSLEY

For his classic take on frog's legs, Jacques replaced sautéed cubes of organic chicken breasts finished with garlic and parsley. It would be preferable to use Wondra flour to give the chicken a crisper coating.

Serves 4

- 3 skinless, boneless chicken breast halves (each about 7 ounces)
- 2 tablespoons Wondra flour (or substitute all-purpose if you must)
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1/2 teaspoon freshly ground pepper
- 2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
- 1 tablespoon finely chopped garlic
- 3 tablespoons chopped fresh flat-leaf parsley
- 2 tablespoons unsalted butter
- 1 lemon quartered

1. Cut chicken breasts into 1 - 1 1/2 inch cubes. Dry the chicken cubes with paper towels and toss them with flour, salt and pepper in a bowl. Heat the oil in a 12-inch skillet over high heat until very hot but not smoking, add the chicken cubes, and cook in one layer, turning occasionally, for about 3 1/2 minutes. Meanwhile combine the garlic and parsley in a small bowl. Add the butter and the parsley mixture to the skillet and sauté for 1 minute longer, shaking the skillet occasionally to coat the chicken.

To serve, divide among four plates, add a wedge of lemon to each plate, and serve within 15 minutes.

PEAR BROWN BETTY

"Jacques suggests using leftover baked goods, from cakes with cream to cookies. Be sure to adjust the amount of cinnamon and butter according to the baked goods you choose. When using rich pastries Jacques cuts back on these ingredients but when using crumbled and cubed bread, he increases them to get the proper results."

Serves 4

1 (29-ounce) can pear halves in heavy syrup (about 6 pear halves)

4 cups (about 10 ounces) coarsely broken pieces of leftover croissants, muffins, scones, Danish pastry and/or bread

2 tablespoons unsalted butter, melted

1/3 cup golden raisins

1 teaspoon ground cinnamon

About 1/3 cup Crème Fraîche or sour cream for serving

1. Heat the oven to 400 degrees. Drain the pears, reserving 1 cup of the syrup. Cut each pear half into 6 pieces. Put the broken pieces of pastry or bread into a bowl and mix in the pear pieces, reserved syrup, butter, raisins and cinnamon. Transfer the mixture to a 4 or 5 cup glass baking dish and bake for 40-50 minutes, until nicely browned on top. Serve lukewarm with a heaping tablespoon of crème fraîche or sour cream on each serving.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Green Invader - Not From Mars

As a child, I marveled at the velvety smoothness of mosses that lived in shady garden areas. Even today, I like the idea of growing mosses in secluded garden corners, along brick paths, and on stones near the pond. Its rich greenness and velvety softness typify the sensibility of a forest and seem to beckon and soothe.

While moss plays an important role in forest ecosystems, it can be a highly invasive and overpowering garden pest, one that requires diligence to control. In fact, moss is one of the most resilient and crafty of plants. Because it grows during wet winter months, it can tackle a garden when other plants are dormant and quickly take control in the battle for space, nutrition, and water.

Moss grows wherever it is moist: wet soil and rocks, near streams and bogs, on the north sides of trees and benches, and in lawns. There are, perhaps, 14,000 living species of mosses, most growing in tropical rainforests where they receive high levels of moisture and dense shade. Mosses grow in heights from about a half inch to three inches, and generally appear as patches with dark-to-bright green or brownish color.

Mosses play a critical role in forest ecosystems where they are responsible for decomposing and breaking down dead logs and hard rock surfaces. Mosses also prevent erosion on shady banks and probably provide shelter and nesting materials for insects and small animals. Dried mosses like Sphagnum have become an important gardening industry. Research also suggests that native peoples used ground moss as an antiseptic to treat cuts and bruises. It is also said that fishermen sometimes wrap freshly caught fish in a coating of wet moss to preserve them for as long as three days. Given the toxic chemical make-up of mosses, these uses make some sense.

Sometimes called the "mean-green machine," mosses are a type of bryophyte. This means they do not have roots like most plants. Rather, mosses have underground filaments called rhizoids that help them to stay in place. These filaments are much weaker than the roots of weeds and other plants.

Winter is the time when mosses spread onto structures before warmer weather sets in. While mosses avidly grow during winter and spring, they typically stop growth and become dormant in warmer, drier weather. Mosses are particularly active in areas that have low sun exposure.

While many gardeners like to include moss as part of the texture of the garden, in lawns, mosses are an invasive pest! They quickly overpower a lawn and significantly reduce turf, especially in poorly draining lawns. Mosses can potentially make lawns uneven and may cause people to trip. Because mosses do not withstand foot traffic, they wear down easily to the soil and leave brown, bare spots that are points of entry for weeds. On bricks and other sidewalk surfaces, mosses can be quite slippery when wet, and will even decompose wooden stairs.

To control the onslaught of moss in lawns and on other surfaces, one of the best controls is to simply rake or pull it out. Also consider pruning trees and shrubs to bring in greater amounts of sunlight (remember that moss will not grow where the soil dries). Frequently scrape moss off of wooden structures (we have found that treatment with one of the commercial mildew sprays sometimes helps).

Our research suggests using chemicals is generally a temporary solution – and no better than diligent scraping and raking. If you feel you want to try chemicals, try a solution made with iron sulfate. There are also a number of products designed specifically for moss eradication. While these will kill moss quickly, the moss will return to shady areas where grass and other plants cannot sufficiently protect themselves.

Because moss is choosy about where it lives, it typically returns to the same places. Keeping a record of where moss has been and frequently policing those areas seems to be the best way to control it from growing in the wrong places.

While mosses provide a soft greenness to shady, moist areas, its invasive nature suggest that encouraging the growth of mosses be considered strongly. The time it takes to diligently control mosses seems an important consideration for gardeners who want to include mosses in the landscape. From our perspective, it has been worth the few hours of raking and pulling required to maintain control over this green invader.

A Belly Dance Beginner

All my life I have been fascinated by the sensual, exotic art of the belly dance, which is considered the world's oldest dance. Seeing these dancers on television, in movies, and once in a live show in a Greek restaurant, I had always wondered what it would be like to learn those sultry moves, and wear silky gold and silver-encrusted hip skirts, which jingle with every gyration.

My moment of truth finally arrived last Wednesday night when I found myself shaking and shimmying to the sing-song sounds of Middle Eastern music. Standing in the midst of a class of about 20 other belly dancing novices, at the Ross School in East Hampton, I soon realized that this ancient, traditional dance is not as easy at it looks.

"Swirl your hips like a figure eight...up, two, three, four, five six, seven, eight, back, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight – now shimmy back and forth, like a washing machine," said our voluptuous instructor, Tina Georgopoulos, who looked every bit the part with her long dark hair, black blouse tied at the midriff, plunging neckline, and a green hip skirt with rows of gold coins jangling away.

Tina, a mother of four who lives in East Hampton, has been teaching belly dancing at the Ross School "forever," as she says, and it's easy to believe that she's been perfecting her art since she was a teenager. Since the origin of belly dancing goes back to the ancient fertility cults, and since this dance features the abdomen, the source of the Goddesses' fertility, it is easy to see its connection to motherhood and birth. The Asian and Mid-eastern origins of this dance are from such countries as Egypt, Turkey, Greece, and Saudi Arabia. Here, it is found "amusing" that some of the same movements of belly dance are also found in the Lamaze birthing classes.

Tina explained that we should twirl our hands in little circles over our heads, while we lift one leg and one hand in the air, while swirling our hips in a figure eight. Somehow this is hard to grasp in one's first belly dance class, and instead of feeling graceful, I felt uncoordinated. But I loved watching all the bright magenta, red, purple, turquoise and green skirts jingling with gold or silver coins, whenever anyone moved. Just tying these silky garments around my hips did wonders for my sensuality, and if I couldn't make the "figure eight" at least I could fake it by jiggling all the coins.

Tina must have read my mind, because in the middle of the two-hour class, she quipped, "When in doubt, just shake your hips." She explained that we should move our hands around by pretending we are plants opening up. We all shook, shimmied and swirled, standing in five rows of four, surrounded by mirrors which further magnified our uncoordinated efforts.

Belly dancing is traditionally done barefoot to connect more directly to Mother Earth. In this case, it was more like a gym floor, but I could get the idea. This dance also grew out of the traditions of rhythmic Near and Middle Eastern music, which I found relaxing and also energizing.

As we shimmied, I was fixated on the woman in front of me, who was wearing an outfit I had never before seen. Lynn Lattuga of Montauk told me during the break that she had actually purchased her backless lavender top with silver sequins and tassels in a belly-dance supply store in South Beach while on a vacation recently. "I thought it would be fun to wear in class," said Lynn, who was no stranger to the world of belly dance, having taken Tina's classes before.

Further proving the belly dance passion, one group of four women told me that they had car-pooled together all the way from East Moriches, Manorville, Westhampton and Riverhead. "This is a fabulous workout," said Tracy Byrne of Westhampton. Sandy Silverman of East Moriches said, "It keeps your attention, and it never gets boring. I'm still sweating."

Aside from a few stomach cramps, after two hours of shaking and shimmying, I think I finally found the "Goddess within," and now you can too.

For all those yearning to try the art of belly dancing, Tina Georgopoulos will be teaching a series of five lessons weekly on Wednesday nights, beginning March 2, for $95. Space is limited, so call the Ross School at 631-329-0142 to sign up.

More Tips, Tricks and Trivia

It's that time again. Time for some more tips, tricks and trivia. I hope they'll leave you thinking, Hmmm, I didn't know that, or Gee, I'm going to try this.

Tip: Be sure to get yourself some fuller flowing skirts in pretty floral patterns. They're a big trend for this spring and were seen all over the runway a couple of weeks ago in NYC's fashion week.

Trick: All or nothing: Make your look, your persona, more interesting by alternating your make-up look and routine. Go all, full make-up or nothing, barely there for no particular reason. You'll keep 'em guessing and always seem intriguing.

Tip: Try mixing foundation with moisturizer...it sinks in, instead of just leaving the foundation color sitting on top of the skin like a mask.

Think thin: 7 Tips, Tricks and Trivia for a slimmer looking you:

1. Wear a big tote bag; it will give the effect of making you look smaller.
2. Try new skinny pants, these amazing, technologically designed pants actually sculpt you in all the right places. Go to www.skinnypants.com for more information.
3. Don't wear Ugg boots and the like. Steer away from more chunk on the ankles and calves.
4. Don't wear bigger baggier clothes than your actual size, thinking they will disguise your shape. They only make you look bigger. Instead, wear clothes that skim your body, without clinging and you'll look pounds lighter.
5. Wear monotone, one color; it's much more slimming.
6. A big don't is wearing tapered pants. They make you look bigger, because every other part of your body is bigger than your ankle...where do tapered pants end? That's right, tapered pants take your eye to the thinnest area of your body, making everything else look chunky in comparison.
7. Laughter is the best medicine for weight loss: If you laugh for 15 minutes every day, it can burn about 40 calories, which in turn amounts to 4 pounds a year.

Trivia: 75% of women in America are wearing the wrong size bra. No, really...it could be you. Get professionally measured for a bra...it will not only give you a better shape, but you'll feel more comfortable.

Trick: For a new spirit and a new emotional high, paint your living room a brighter, fresher color. If your environment sparkles and seems brighter, so will you.

Tip: Top up your toothpaste...Everyone should spend two minutes brushing their teeth, twice a day. But you can remove more plaque and bump up your smile if you add extra paste about 30 seconds before the end of brushing.

Trivia: Beware: Don't test make-up at the cosmetic counter. Why? Because there have, most likely, been hundreds of people who have tried that same product before you, leaving their bacteria and germs behind. You could easily contract eye and skin infections just by trying a new color at your local store. If you really must try that luscious blue liner or shadow, that hint of new color you're sure will make you a new woman, then ask the attendant behind the counter to wipe the product clean before you test.

Tip: Dream of silky, slick looking hair? When you try to add extra conditioner or other products that promise to give you shine, do you fail to get it, ending up with oily limp locks instead? Try Umberto Giannini Dazzling Shine Laminate, $10. This product contains light reflective silicone and when applied with the palm of your hand will shine like the sun.

Trick: Ever overdo the blusher? Not sure how to quickly and easily tone it down? Pop some concealer on top and then blend for a subtler hint of color.

Trivia: Graze and gain...less. Yes, it's true. Eat a large, low calorie salad before a meal and you consume 12 percent fewer calories over all.

Trivia: Calling all chocoholics. Great news, if you happen to have a tickle in the throat, then treat yourself to a cup o' hot choc. Apparently, theobromine, a compound found in cocoa, has been shown to be more effective in stopping a cough than codeine.

Trivia: Wake up and smell the roses: People who smell floral scents are 17 percent quicker at mental tasks than those who don't.

Tip: Be sure to get your beauty rest, because lack of sleep can lead to increased appetite.

Trick: You can have an all over, even, streak-less, sunless tan and it can be achieved in the comfort of your own home. All you need to do is airbrush yourself. Go to: www.salonbronzetan.com for more details.

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

Rentals, rentals, everywhere! The East End rental season is in full swing. There are literally hundreds of rentals on the market right now. Many returning summer residents reserve their summer spot long in advance or rent the same cottage, home or mansion each year. East End offices are busy showing their varied portfolios from Montauk to Westhampton, Baiting Hollow to Orient and the outlying islands. The two forks draw two separate summer crowds, with two sets of criteria. East End realtors on both forks implement customized services to accommodate their very discriminating clients. Summer people come from all over now, not just the tri-state area. This is mostly due to national real estate firms infiltrating the entire East End and drawing visitors from all over the country.

Rental prices range from $450,000 a season on the very high end, for a Southampton oceanfront, to $30,000 for a very modest East Hampton cottage.

Vicki Reynolds from Norma Reynolds Realty in Westhampton Beach, whose office has just seen two $9 million sales recently, says the price point on her summer rentals is generally $45,000, but on the ocean, it is more like $125,000. She said that her clients are looking for light, bright contemporary homes on the ocean and the only problem is that there is just not enough inventory of oceanfront rentals. "Everyone wants the same thing."

One of their current summer rental listings includes a 5 bedroom, 4 bath waterfront with a deepwater dock in Remsenburg. The home has a tennis court, a heated gunite pool, granite barbeque and cathedral media room. You can rent the home for the summer for $65,000, or pur- quarters, staff quarters, full cabana and powder room and 3-car garage. It is listed with Allan M. Schneider Associates Amagansett office.

Real Hamptons Realty in Westhampton reports that it has already rented 4 oceanfront at $125,000 and says the "Market is on fire." That office has also been party recently to another high $7.2 million sale.

And in Water Mill in the Fordune Compound area you can rent an 8 bedroom, 8.5-bath traditional for $450,000 for the season or $170,000 for August through Labor Day. It has a pool, an all weather tennis court and nearly 3 acres enclosed in a private gated community and beach. It is listed with Century 21 Agawam Albertson in Southampton.

And on the very low end, one can still find a single story 3-bedroom, 2-bath cottage in East Hampton for $30,000 annually. This 2000 sq ft home is located northwest of Gardiner's Bay on 1 acre and nearby to a sandy bay beach. This little contemporary is listed with Alan M. Schneider's East Hampton Office.

For $75,000 a season in Water Mill South on Mecox Bay you can rent a fully furnished 4-bedroom, 3 bath with private dock on the bay. It has a heated pool and indoor exercise pool, sun room and a 2-car garage with a studio. It is listed with Sotheby's International Realty in Southampton.

You can reach Diane at eastendrealist@aol.com

Westhampton summer rental

chase it for $1,995,000.

In the Amagansett dunes on the ocean and across from the bay, with views of both, is a spectacular summer rental that you can take for $375,000 for the entire season. Or, you can opt for July or August alone for $200,000 a month. Or, even take just two weeks at $70,000. This one is a post modern, new to the market and has all the amenities one could want including 7 bedrooms and 8.5 baths totaling 5500 sq ft. It has a heated pool, mahogany decking and is set out on 2.2 acres with a private pathway to the ocean beach. There are guest

POWERED BY WHAT?

Dear Dan,

On the morning of Tuesday, January 18, dozens of representatives of environmental groups gathered in below freezing temperatures and gale force winds to voice their opposition to the liquefied natural gas facility currently proposed for Long Island Sound. The demonstration, covered by the media, took place at the defunct Shoreham Nuclear Power Plant in Wading River.

While these dedicated Long Islanders risked frostbite one of the coldest days in years, Mr. John Hritcko, Senior VP and Regional Project Director of Broadwater Energy, the Canada/Texas consortium behind the project, said from the warmth of the Inn at East Wind where, naturally, these bitter winds never penetrated: "What you're seeing is just that small number of folks who are coming out vocally opposed to the project early. What we're saying here today is that making a decision at this stage, when not all the facts are known, when there's still info that has to be gathered, is premature."

That "small number of folks" knows all the facts it needs to know about liquefied natural gas: Natural gas is extracted from the earth, mostly in countries where the people don't have stoves to use the gas, then chilled or frozen to minus 260 degrees F., at which point it becomes a liquid. The liquid is then shipped in tankers, which must maintain that temperature to LNG facilities such as the one proposed for Long Island Sound, where it is stored and "re-gasified" for use as needed.

Paradoxically, the LNG facility, if completed, will not be providing natural gas to Long Island but to New York City and Connecticut via underwater pipeline.

James Fay, professor emeritus of mechanical engineering of MIT says if a tanker is damaged so that the liquid gas spills into the water and is ignited, even by a small spark, a very likely scenario, 15,000 cubic meters will burn up in five minutes in what can only be described as a holocaust. The LNG burns hotter than gasoline and once ignited cannot be extinguished. Everything in a two-mile radius from the tanker will be incinerated.

But never fear. Mr. Hritcko says every precaution would be taken so that this doesn't happen. Firefighting and other vessels will be in constant attendance in a "no-boat, no-fly" zone, so that if a fire should start on the carrier-sized floating facility it will be contained. Mr. Hritcko knows full well that liquefied natural gas once ignited cannot be extinguished.

Perhaps this is the time to remind everyone that a United States Navy destroyer received an immense hole in its hull by terrorists in a rowboat; that the twin towers were brought down by terrorists whose brothers are no respecters of no-fly zones; and that the people who built the Titanic said it couldn't sink.

However, we have become so inured to oil spills from tankers off Alaska that perhaps we shouldn't give this too much thought.

Besides terrorist attacks and the environmental and ecological changes that are too tedious to mention, let's consider that once this sort of thing gets started there will be no end to the exploitation of Long Island Sound. After all, if they can build oil rigs in the hostile North Sea; they can build condos on stilts in lovely Long Island Sound, can't they?

Long Island Sound is one of the most beautiful bodies of water in the nation. It belongs to no one and no one should be permitted to own a piece of it.

The $15 million annual payment offered by Broadwater Energy to the town of Riverhead for permission to proceed with the project is an insult to our intelligence. You can be sure that money will have come out of our own pockets in the first place. No amount of payola should ever be accepted by any town on Long Island to allow this disaster in the making to come to completion.

So, if you live anywhere on Long Island and think this behemoth anchored off the shore of Wading River doesn't concern you because you live far enough away from Wading River, think again. If you think nothing will ever happen to this vessel when battleships and aircraft carriers have been sunk by a determined enemy, then don't worry about it. You can start worrying when it's too late.

The worst thing that could happen is for everyone to get tired of fighting this and become apathetic to it. The people who braved the cold on January 18 weren't speaking for themselves alone. They were speaking for you whether you know it or not. More credit to them.

Vincent Torre
Mattituck

This is the first time anyone has proposed building such a plant as a free floating vessel. Maybe they should build it with big guns and a fighter plane runway.

Dear Dan,

Dear Dan,

Again, I am in your debt for selecting my watercolor for the cover of Dan's Papers this week.

Your covers and Marion's interviews are such a wonderful gift that you continually give to the artists that you select. It always surprises me to hear from people who I have lost contact with that actually read your paper.

May the paper continue to grow and be as warmly received and widely read as it is today. Thanks so much.

Police Blotter

Grown Woman Behaving Abominably. Talking about bad, bad girls. These two vile vixens were arrested by Southampton Town Police for allegedly robbing a 79-year-old man, a resident of the McLeod's Trailer Park on Riverleigh Avenue in Riverside. According to police reports, the elderly fellow told authorities that two women he knew stole nearly $200 in cash along with his telephone to prevent him from reporting the crime. Based on information received from the victim, police tracked down the accused, two Riverside women in their thirties, and arrested the duo on charges of robbery in the second degree.

Nightclub Go Boom-Boom! Apparently a bomb threat was received by the Brazil nightclub in Hampton Bays on a recent weekend evening. Southampton Police told reporters the area was under suspicion, but they did not find an explosive device.

Crackdown On Crack Is A Clean Sweep. As a result of numerous long-term undercover investigations targeting dealers in Hampton Bays, Flanders and Riverside, Southampton Town Police confirmed that 20 arrests have been made and that more are expected. All of the perps reportedly made "hand-to-hand" sales of crack or powdered cocaine to undercover officers. Recently arrested were four men, who were charged with criminal sale and possession of a controlled substance in the third degree, a Class B felony.

Undercover Caper. A suspect known to an employee of the Sunglass Hut eyewear shop on Montauk Highway opted for a five-finger trade-in. The sticky-fingered felon left his old shades and sneaked out with a spanking new pair. The sales associate told police that she knows the thief's name.

Shimsham...Flimflam! Let this be a lesson, if it sounds too good to be true...then perhaps it is. Case in point, an East Hamptonite was told earlier this month that he won $680,000 from a national bank in Jamaica. In order to collect his winnings he was required to wire $8,650 to cover taxes associated with that cash prize. In spite of incurring a service charge of $432.50 from Western Union, he sent the funds. When his alleged prize winnings did not show up, his bank notified East Hampton Village police.

Cat Nipped. Me-ow! The fur is flying on Lee Avenue in the village. It seems an errant kitty found in a neighbor's yard was unceremoniously dropped off at the Animal Rescue Fund of the Hamptons located in Wainscott. The cat's person was warned that if the feline was found in the yard again, it would be taken to a New York City shelter.

Motor Mayhem. Apparently a Mercury motor was stolen from a boat stored in the yard of a Harbor Hill Lane home in Springs. Valued at $2,500, the engine was removed sometime between the end of December and the beginning of February. The homeowner noticed it was missing when the snow began to melt off the boat.

Sugar Addict Cases Sweet Shop. A pixie with a sweet tooth but no cash to satisfy it apparently stole three bags of candy and one Twizzler from the Nuts about Chocolate shop on Main Street in East Hampton.
